INDIANS ARE STARVING.

Maj. S. W. Campbell Goes to Assistance of Lost Tribe.

SEVERE COLD SNAP.

Long and Perilous Trip of Officials to Issue Food to Red Men.

Ashland, Wis., Feb. 23.—Maj. S. W. Campbell, agent and R. G. Rodman, chief clerk of the La Pointe Indian agency, left this morning to attend to the wants of the Lost Tribe, as they are called. These Indians were not notified by the government until a year or so ago, and are connected with no agency. The La Pointe agency being the nearest one to them, it becomes Maj. Campbell's humane duty to look after them and supply them with provisions when they are out of them. It is reported to the agency that these Indians are in sore straits, owing to the recent long spell of cold weather. Maj. Campbell will issue some flour, meat and other provisions to them, which will last until spring, when they will be able to return to their reservation. The trip is a long and perilous one. They will have to go about 225 miles by the shortest route, and will have to travel about 140 miles farther than the nearest reservation.

La Crosse Humane Society Inaugurates War Against Live Bird Shooting.

La Crosse, Wis., Feb. 23.—[Special.]—The Humane society has inaugurated a war against live bird shooting in the local gun club. Yesterday some sixty sportsmen, members of the Recreation Gun club, pulled off a live pigeon shoot on Karon's island in the Mississippi river, midway between Wisconsin and Minnesota, in which several hundred birds were slaughtered. The humane society has determined to put a stop to the practice and threaten to have wholesale arrests made. Many of the club members are prominent business men. The humane society has already written to the club and should it be decided that arrests cannot be made in Wisconsin, the Minnesota branch of the humane society will be asked to join in the prosecution. The same club has lately pulled off a live duck shoot in the same manner. The humane society members have concluded that it is about time to put a stop to the whole business.

DIVINES DON'T GET IT.

Will of Thomas Stewart of Janesville Set Aside in Circuit Court.

Janesville, Wis., Feb. 23.—[Special.]—Judge John B. Bennett of the circuit court of Rock county has just handed down a decision that deprives the superannuated ministers of the estate of Thomas Stewart, a resident of Brethren of Christ of property to the value of $25,000. The action was that of A. J. Duer, a wealthy and well-to-do man of Grant county, who died ten years ago, leaving a fortune of $25,000. The will named as executors, real and personal, to the value of $25,000, the superannuated ministers of the church, and to the value of the same till her death, and that then it was to go into the general fund to pay the debts of the estate. The superannuated ministers who constituted the will to include just one superannuated divine claimed that they were the only true members of the church and that the others had disgraced the name of the church by their conduct. The court, after hearing the evidence, held that there was nothing in the will to include just one superannuated minister, that the bequest was valid for the entire church.

DEATH OF FRANCE'S PRESIDENT.

The republic of France lost its president by death on the 16th inst. and within forty-eight hours had a new one, elected by the national legislature. No turmoil, no excitement, no trouble of any kind accompanied the change—a significant fact, considering the previous history of the country. It is an indication that the French people have learned something that other nations had not thought possible for her. The world had come to think that such an event as the sudden and unexpected death of the head of the government would be the signal for a revolution, or at least of an attempt to change the form of government, but it is the unexpected that often happens. President Faure died very suddenly and almost before the world had begun to wonder what unforeseen event would happen to fix the future status of France. M. Loubet, president of the senate, was elected to fill his place, and by such a decisive majority as assured the stability of the republic.

Ever since the fall of the second empire, through the disastrous defeat of France by Germany in the war of 1870, there have been contending elements among the French people. The Bonapartists seek, and will always seek, to restore their family to the throne. The Bourbon and Orleans families have also kept up their pretensions to the supreme power and only waited a favorable opportunity to again seize the reins of government. Perhaps it was the salient feature of the republic that the monarchists were divided into three hostile camps, all bitterly antagonistic to each other, since one resolute and determined aspirant to the throne, backed by the power of the army, would have been a serious menace to its perpetuity. The army is naturally the support of monarchy, and it was an ever-present menace to the republic, but it could not make its choice under the circumstances and therefore was not a menace to the republic.

President Loubet is a man who is universally respected, not alone in France but throughout all Europe. He is a safe and conservative man, one who has no ambition except for his country's welfare, one who did not seek the office, and who would have been glad to serve France in a subordinate capacity, but his fitness for the position was so universally conceded that his protest was overruled. His first official act was to request the ministry to continue in office, thus showing that he did not desire to disturb the regular order of government, and it gained him new friends among those who dreaded political agitation and change. A hundred years have seen great changes in France, among them the elevation of two Bonapartes to the imperial throne, the return of the Bourbons after the fall of Napoleon, their expulsion by an uprising of the people, the election of Louis Napoleon as president and later his ascension as emperor to the throne of his illustrious uncle, and again the restoration of the republic on a stronger and more enduring basis. The people have learned the lessons of adversity and know their strength. The future of France is now brighter than ever, for she has shown that she understands the value of liberty and representative government. The late events prove that monarchy has lost its hold on the people, and as the years pass by it will become more and more difficult to restore it. The French people are free and will remain free. Next to this country theirs is the strongest and most liberal republic in the world.

LORD BERESFORD of England went through this country last week on his way home from China, where he went as the representative of British commercial bodies to study the trade situation and devise a plan to utilize it for the advantage of the great commercial nations of the world. He believes in a commercial union of Great Britain, America, Germany and Japan to control the trade of China and protect the country from the rapacity of Russia and France, which if not opposed by other nations would divide up the country and give international trade a blow from which it would be hard to recover. The commercial interests of this country are in favor of the Beresford plan, and though there is not likely to be any definite alliance between the commercial nations, yet they will probably act together to exert a moral influence in the right direction. China, if well protected by the trading nations, will be capable of great development. The country is rich in resources, its people are industrious and frugal, and its trade is worth a struggle. If the plan of Lord Beresford succeeds he will gain a name that will live forever in his as a benefactor of the world.

REAR ADMIRAL SCHLEY has replied to the criticisms of his course in the Santiago campaign, and has made out a good case. He shows that in the points criticised he was acting under orders and that the orders were suppressed in the report of Admiral Sampson. Schley has a remarkably brilliant record as a naval officer and stands deservedly high in the estimation of the American people.

Judge Dick of this circuit has decided that the usual method of issuing papers to naturalized citizens is illegal and that it must be stopped. The law provides that an applicant for citizenship shall be sworn and examined in open court. This provision has been evaded by clerks bringing the applicants within the outer doors of the court-room and there administering the oath. Dick's decision requires that the ceremony of conferring citizenship shall be a complete court function instead of a sham, and that it shall be made a solemn and impressive affair.

A COURT OF inquiry is in session at Washington to examine into charges made by Gen. Miles as to the character of the beef furnished to the army in Cuba and Porto Rico. Gen. Miles was examined by the court and took the ground that the only proper way to supply an army with beef is to keep herds with it and kill the cattle as they are needed. He pointed out that Cuba and Porto Rico are good grass countries and that the beef cattle would thrive there, also showing that for a hundred years the plan has been followed, "even in Mexico, where it was so hot that a soldier could not sit on the rocks." The refrigerator beef and canned beef furnished by contractors for the use of the army has been condemned by a great majority of the officers. The experiment was very unsatisfactory, and it is not likely that it will be repeated in future.

OLD SETTLERS' MEETING. The thirteenth annual meeting of the Old Settlers' club was held in the I. O. G. T. hall on the 22nd inst. Members of the club arrived at about 10 a. m. and prepared for a picnic dinner, which was served from 12 to 1 p. m. The meeting was called to order by President E. L. Peck at 1:30. After prayer by Rev. O. A. Nuss, the audience joined the choir in singing "America." The minutes of the previous meeting were then read by Mrs. I. Hemenway, secretary, and after their adoption the choir sang "The Old Folks at Home." The old settlers were then called upon to relate their experience, and the following responded:

Joseph Hull and Alden Hull, who voted for the adoption of the constitution of Wisconsin in 1847, having come here in 1844. They also spoke of the wheat war in Kenosha.

Mr. Colvin of Kewaskum next favored the audience with a few remarks. The choir then sang "My Old Kentucky Home."

Mr. Trippe of Eden then spoke of the hardships and trials of early days, and particularly of "wild cat" money. The oldest settler present was Mrs. Alden Hull, who arrived in Wisconsin in 1837.

AN EDITOR'S VOICE.

Out from the sanctum burst a roar, The "devil" bellowed through the door: Wild, bulging eyes, hair stiff and straight Upon his coffee-colored pate; So badly was the silence rent, The windows shook with ill portent: Each number trembled on the file; Books slid in terror from the pile; Said he who could explain the din: "The last proof sheet has just got in."

Now through the still vibrating door, These words came in a suppressed roar: "What in hell will you publish this? Of this black mass of scotered ink; Here's ink enough dabbed on one page To furnish printers for an age; Letters left out and words misplaced, A dozen lines together laced; As drunkards who each other brace And weave a stammering, pitching pace.

"This item here I scarce can trace, The next is on a down-hill race; The next is an ad. turned upside down, Well, surely that will bring renown, Yes, and the advertiser, too, To have his patronage withdrawn, This week's get item, too, is flattered; I can't make out a single word, Wait, here's a few; they sell my fate, They read, 'He has to pull his freight.'"

But all this happened long ago; Papers, like children, have to grow; Now newsy sheets make glad the eyes, No faulty rumor in them lies; Merchants have found that printing pays, And tasty ads. invite our gaze; So with an effort cease to groan, We have a paper smoothly run. Yet as our memory backward swings, To those old sheets our fondly cling; And oft the editor laughs low, When he thinks of those days long ago.—W. H. Doyle, Co. H, First Montana, in Manila Times.

"Well, what were you doing when the police made the raid?" "Well, sir, I was just making a bolt for the door."—Family Doctor.
