The war office received the following dispatch from Gen. Buller, dated Pietermaritzburg, Wednesday, November 29:

men were concealed in trenches and in a dense thicket. They had also two large guns, four Krupps, and other artillery, and the river was in front protecting them against a bayonet charge. Possibly a Drawn Battle.

The pains taken by Gen. Methuen point out the difficulties of the situa-tion, and of the strenuous exertions of the entire British force, which fought from dawn to dusk without food or wao describe it as a drawn battle with leavy losses of killed and wounded. Gen. Methnen himself, while praising the conduct of all engaged, especially the batteries of artillery, did not claim a decisive victory, but only asserted that he had compelled the enemy to quit its positive.

How this has been done by the artilno military expert has attempted to ex-plain. A South African describes the rossed the river when it was a mere ribble, but again when it was broad nd deep. The northern bank was a much higher one than the opposite one, and, unlike most African water courses, there were trees and brushwood on each side. It was not a rocky country, but otherwise the Boers had chosen an ad-mirable position for defense, and had made excellent use of it throughout the impaign.

Methuen's movement or the big fight had been given out up to 2:30 o'clock this afternoon. This is generally taken to indicate that Gen. Methuen is again on the march and that as heretofore will not again be heard from until he has fought another battle and gained another stage. That the general anticipated dogged resistance on his northward march is shown by the speech which he delivered to his troops November 27, after the battle of Graspan, reports of which have just arrived here. After reading a telegram from Gov. Mitner, congratulating the troops and sympathizing with the wounded, Gen. Methuen personally congratulated the troops on the work done, and expressed apprecia-

Capt. Gridley's Monument. The memory of Capt. Charles E. Gridley, who died shortly after the battle of Manila, in which he commanded the Olympia, will be fittingly preserved by the city of Erie, Pa., in which his ashes lie. On an eminence along the shore of Lake Erie, where it can be seen for miles by land and water, a beautiful monument is to be erected and surrounded by drives. The design for the monument has been approved by the monument has been approved by the Gridley family, and the committee in charge of the work. The design shows a shaft which will rise seventy feet from the ground. It will be constructed of granite and is to be finished with a pedestal of handsome proportions. On the front will appear the arms of the United States surmounted by a sheaf of boarding pikes, flages and sabers, all dominated by an eagle in bronze. Directly below will be a bronze medallion of Capt. Gridley with a gward on either side. below will be a bronze medallion of Capt. Gridley with a sword on either side. On the opposite side of the base from the coat of arms it is proposed to place a representation of the Olympia. On another side will be presented the scene of the battle of Manila bay, while another suitable design will be on the fourth side. The famous words of Admiral Dewey to Capt. Gridley, which have passed into motto, "You may fire when ready, Gridley," are to occupy a position in connection with the bust of the captain. the captain.

PEARLS BECOMING PRICELESS.

They Increase in Popularity Their Value Grows in Proportion. Let every woman who possesses pearls, arge or small, prize them more than all her treasures, for they are increasing in value at an extraordinary rate. Every day they are more sought after and become more fashionable, so that in consequence they are becoming scarcer. Very long chains composed entirely of pearls are most beautiful, but, of course, the price is prohibitive to most people; they should never be made of imitation pearls, as the effect is part to be meretricious and as the effect is apt to be meretricious and vulgar.

Those who believe in the superstition that pearls are signicant of tears may, perchance, have their fears corroborated from the fact that the lovely but unfor tunate Empress Eugenie (who, by the way, put no faith then in the superstition) were a superh necklace of pearls on way, put no faith then in the supersti-tion) wore a superb necklace of pearls on her wedding day. The satin of her gown was made to exactly match the tone of the necklace. When the war of 1870-71 was over this necklace was sold with many other of the crown jewels. The pearls were scattered, for no bidder would offer the £80,000, the price of the cight rows, so that the four uecklaces of two rows each were eventually disposed Face to Face with Kruger. Here was Paul Kruger just as every wspaper reader has often seen him depicted, whether in porrait or caricature. The peculiar Kruger beard, sparse, close and long enough to conceal perfectly a thick, short neck; the narrow, grayish ment nose that suggests spatulation, a to windward; but I doubt if that means behind. wide mouth, firm chin, and a body so thin that it makes his legs look short and slender in comparison. Kruger's head and features are massive. They give the idea of sluggishness rather than acuteness and strength. This impression, however, is offset by the eyes, which are topped with heavy brows, and have underneath puffs of flesh which help to conceal them. These eyes, during conversation, narrow to a mere glint and give reached the skin is skin is constituted. The skin is skin is constituted in the skin is skin is constituted and smash. His skin is brownish-yellow, and the countenance was torn in shreds. His friends said, "Let us hurry to a surgeon and have it amputated." Kruger said, "Ikona! I will cut it off myself." With that he whipped out a rusty hunting knife, and, placing the thumb on the stock of a gun, amputated it. You notice this stump immediately, for he is holding his short, crooked briar pipe in his four fingers. You know, therefore, that this man is brave. That he can cope with the most able statesmen of Europe, however, seems absurd. You feel that he has been greatly overestimated. He groped about in his uneasiness, desiring to learn what was being done to meet this impending hurricane, if it should prove to be one, and found that everything had been made shug. The captain and first mate were on duty. He attempted to ask questions, but got only evasive answers, and finally flourishing '40s. She cut out as good work as could be expected after getting into the southeast trades, and had fair weather most of the time across. After that it came on to blow a little, and when it finally cleared up she had about half completed her straight easterly run. Her position will now have to be studied somewhat in detail in order to understand fully what followed. As precisely as can be learned, she was 500 miles south, by a few points west of the Cape of Good Hope, in latitude 42 degrees S.,

Then he gave another short look windward and walked slowly aft. to windward and walked slowly aft.
Arva Lake came on deck just at this moment, and caught a glimpse of the captain's face. He was turning away, and did not seem to see her, but she was struck by his rather unusual look.

She hesitated and then moved on forward, where she was immediately joined by a tall young man who was smoking a cigar. This young man, dressed in a landsman's suit of business clothes, except that he wore a sailor's reefer, took "And the rest of that hamper has been "Yes, sir." "Very well. I don't know as there hip was kept on her same course. By this time the wind was not quite so teady, but was again coming in irregular uffs. For some reason it did not appear be growing darker. This might have to be growing darker. This hight have been caused by the thinning of the clouds in the west, or by the general lifting of the vapors around the horizon.

But a change was at hand. By degrees the yellow line in the north began to leave the sea and broaden, and cavify ripple like a squall passed over gan to leave the sea and broaden, and a swift ripple, like a squall, passed over the water. As this died out the light again began to fail. The sea grew blacker as the shadow deepened, a white picking-out to windward growing into distinct flashes, and the whole sky faded to a dull gray. Then came a distant rushing noise, like the sweep of great wings, and this rapidly deepened to a hollow roar. The farthest crests instantly flew up white and wild, and in a twinkling the whole line rushed down apon them. There was the sense of a eassuring. He backed around to protect for from the wind. His figure was not form the wind. His figure was not for the protect here from the wind. His figure was not in a mood to be critical. "I guess you are giving way a little to your imagination," he began. "I haven't noticed anything peculiar in the skipper's manner. twinkling the whole line rushed down upon them. There was the sense of a crash, and then all things seemed to fly into an intangible cloud of mist and spray. Nothing to do now but catch breath and hold fast. The ship's nose drove heavily under. Down she wallowed, as though for the bottom itself. Then she ran out and shook herself gallantly clear, though her masts bent and her shrouds jerked and hummed with ease, won't you just glance round and il me what you think? Does it seem se a storm?" "I'll look, but my opinion isn't good for nything; you know I'm no sailor." He ecordingly turned about and studied all her shrouds jerked and hummed with the fearful strain. Now she was fairly in for it, and away she tore into the south, the gale yelling its worst and the great combers tumbling and lashing at means "What do you think?"
"Well, I don't see anything very par-cular. It's a little bilious-looking down It was continuous dip an anything. I think we've had it just so

"But he is used to it, you see," she argued, "and that is different. What would happen if it should blow what he would floor, and at the next it was near being brownish-yellow, and the countenance shows many a furrow. The teeth are strong, irregular and not white. His arms are rather long. The hands muscular, and the fingers short. His left thumb is missing. He lost this when out hunting elephants one day. An old rifle exploded in his hand and the thumb triple explored in his han am most decidedly inclined to that view. It's very uncomfortable to think anything else. Don't you say so?"
"Oh, dear!" she half laughed, half groaned, "men haven't any nerves. At least, you haven't. Do be a good fellew and ask the captain about it. There he comes. If he says it's all right, I wen't make any more fuss. You know I'm not a coward about everything, but to conceive the thought or pluck up the spirit to light a lamp. Perhaps it was a dangerous luxury, even if obtained, with everything so terribly topsy-turvy.

The actual shrick and tear of the gale were deadened, but the crazy pitch and the awful thunder of the seas against the sides were even more realizable than on deck. Finally Will Arkley did have the courage to light a solitary candle, and while steadying and supporting poor Arva, managed also to keep it burning. This relieved the herror a little. So the I'm not a coward about everything, but

First, an unusual rell and wallowing, then a long, high swing. and at last something like a steady heaving falling. The men passengers at once understood what had happened. The ship was no longer before the wind. No doubt in such a gale the after-seas had been blown up high enough to threaten to swamp her, and she had been brought. to swamp her, and she had been brought to. How the thing was managed in such a fury, even taking advantage of the best approach to a lull that had been, they could not see; but it appeared that good seamanship had actually accomplished it. Gale or no gale, yards had been settled, sails had been smothered, and jeens and clew-garnets had been handled. For awhile, now, she hung easier.

Several hours passed. Watching and

There was nearly the same roll and swing, but less jar and tremble. After a few hours she began to think that perhaps her fears had been exaggerated. tremble. This encouraged them so much that one of the men went up the companion to learn more. He was unable to get out, as the doors had been made fast, and through the little grated windows nothing whatever was to be seen—the darkness was too absolute. However, he did make one discovery. The So the rest of the forenoon passed.

This was an eventful cruise for Arva
Lake and Wili Arkley: for, on reaching Calcutta, they were to be married.

They had originally intended to have the ever, he did make one discovery. The ship was steadier and under better con-trol. He returned and reported, and they contented themselvs for a while longer. Then Arkley took his turn, also trying the doors. To his great satis-faction he was successful and forced his way out. It was nearly as dark as his way out. It was nearly as dark as ever, though it must have been near sunrise, and there was a smother of wind ability and few scholars, and he a book-ke per of short experience and as yet light salary—and so friends and fashionable society had no strong claims upon them, and they felt that they could do as they pleased. In relation to their prospects the outlook seemed to be good. At least, Arkley believed it to be so. He was to sunrise, and there was a smother of wind and spray and a great banging and wrenching of everything about the ship. Forward and att he could dimly catch the twinkle of lanterns, and there was a blur or two of human figures. Mani-festly there was nothing to do but go back, and he did. Finally daylight came soon after the second mate visited. He brought them encouragement good opportunities for advancement and from the captain, and said that the wors was surely over. He then left them and another dreary period passed. After a time they stirred about a little, and a few cheerful ones talked of something to eat. So, with but little variation, the rhaps an ultimate interest in the busi-ess. Of course the young couple did not intend to live in India all their lives; but Capt. Carter, the retired shipmaster who had secured Arkley the situation, had told rest of the morning went by. Daylight came at last, but with it no sun, and the ship yet pitched and strained distry, and that there was no absolute necessity of dying of fever or snake bites. A little sense and a good supply of quinine, together with care as to leaving windows and doors open and poking into places without looking, would take one through, even in the small viliages. So they thought that they could stand it for a while, and were courageous, even to building a fewair castles. These were set over against the time of their return, and generally had reference to a certain cottage a few miles out of Boston, with honeysuckle and woodbine running over it. Once Arktressfully. In fact, the whole of that day and night passed before there was the radical improvement they looked for. Early the next morning, however, it was so much better that Arkley returned again on deck. It could be called light, though the sun was not yet able to break through the pack of clouds, and there was still a furious and tumbling sea. through the pack of clouds, and through through through the pack of clouds, and the pack of clouds, an tve gone still further; but she couldn't actly follow the plan, and got mixed on the points of the compass. However, ty. As far as Arkley could judge, there was nothing seriously wrong with the old craft, and she had come out of her terrible struggle with no loss, unless it was that of some of her smaller spars and top-hamper. He thought, also, that he missed one or two of her house. But atters were swallowed up in the grea non safety. e of the-co

The captain had already made a rough estimate of his whereabouts, and at noon was able to make it sure by the sun. He found that the Daniel Gray was close to 120 miles off her course, being that distance south, by a trifle east. The vind was still very nearly north.

They got everything in trim and bowled long for a few kours, and then experienced another disappointment, as it fell calm. This state of things continued for three days. It was disagreeable enough or the passengers, for of course there was still considerable swell on, and the old craft pitched wretchedly. On the fourth morning a little breeze sprung up, still nearly from the north, and she gathered slow headway. It was perhaps seven bells when Harris appeared on deck and asked sharply for the captain. He was told by the man addressed that he was in his cable or research. the was in his cabin, or was thought to be, upon which the officer hurried be-ow. He did not stay an instant for cere-nony, but thrust against the door, found t unlocked and bolted in.

as a captain was in those days, it was something breath-taking. Nevertheless, what Harris said made his superior forget at once both his own dignity and the offense. "Ship's afire, sir!"

The old man sprang up as though electrons as the doctress; he refused to cut off his cherished beard, and preferred to leave the hospital, and process and all, somewhere else. And here we are bidden to note the superiority of woman over man; but, after all, it is but the old the superiority of woman has always sacrificed. offense. "Ship's afire, sir!"

The old man sprang up as though elec-"What's that?"

"What's that?"
"Yes, sir, Just found it out. Nearly through the ceiling and planking. Not blazed up any yet, though."
"But where—how did it catch?" Even while he was speaking the veter-an had collected himself, and the color, which had died out of his face for the was returning.

"Well for ard in the hold, sir. Think must have caught from the shifting round of the cargo during the blow. Probably been smoldering ever since."
"It's those d—d chemicals for the Indian college!" ripped out the captain sav-agely. "Do any of the men know of

"Nobody but the carpenter. He's down "Come along, then. Mum till we know the worst."

They both hurried below. In brief, Harris had stated the fact. The fire had eaten nearly through the ceiling and planking. It was probably the chemicals, for one package of them was broken and scattered, and a peculiar smell came up from the burned places. But the worst was to be discovered. On making further examination it appeared that the treacherous fire had crept over to other spots, and that what they had found was only one of a honeycomb of noles. It was clear that the ship was doomed. Already they could hear a sough of water further aft, and there could be no doubt but it was a broad pool toward the well. There was only to make as good a job of rough-stopping as possible, and then take to the boats. What must be done now was to gain time. Of the four boats two had been either smashed in the gale or carried away, but, fortunately, the two that remained would suffice. The one and only hope was to fit these out

MICROBES AND HAIR.

A Nurse Sacrifices the Latter to Banish the Former. Microbes and new women are the two great factors in modern life, and when the two come together they can vanquish even a medical man, as a strange story from Hungary shows. There is a young doctress of medicine in Hungary who has the most magnificent hair, and she was anxious to know the hospital operations of a certain famous surgeon ever; she found admission denied her, and on her inquiring why, the surgeon said that she had too much hair; that hair was a home for microbes, and so she might render his best operations dangerous to the patient. There was nothing for it; the girl was ardent in the pursuit of science, so she cropped her hair short. But it happened that one of the other hospital surgeons had a magnificent beard, so the doctress went to the great surgeon and said: "Doctor, you made me cut off my hair, but you allow one of ineasiness, desiring to learn what was being done to meet this impending lurricane, if it should prove to be one, and found that everything had been made sing. The captain and first mate were on duty. He attempted to ask questions, but got only evasive answers, and finally went below again.

In a few minutes a puff of wind struck the additional province of the case of an ordinary person, but in that of a veritable sea-potentate, such that of a veritable sea-potentate that his colleague should either shave of leave the hospital. story. A woman has always sacrificed everything for the whim of the moment, however much she may repent afterwards.

Smyth Co., located at 150 to 166 West Madison street, Chicago, has been established for a third of a century, and has furnished over half a million homes in Chicago and vicinity alone. This firm enjoys the confidence of the public by its many years of fair dealing. It issues an immense illustrated catalogue that should be in every family, as it describes and gives the price of every article required for household use. A sample of the extraordinary values offered by this firm is shown in the illustration of the "Melba" sewing machine in another column of this paper for $14.25. This is one of the best sewing machines ever offered to the public, and yet it is but a sample of the thousand and one useful articles illustrated and described in the beautiful cat- NEW ENGLAND, STORE, Milwaukee alogue of the John M. A Famous Stag Shot.

There has lived for many years past in the forest of Loch Rosque a famous stag known as the Switcher (although he generally carried five or six points), because he had been a Caber Schacht in early life. In 1895 Mr. Bignold gave him his life, and since then the hill or-ders have been, "Take a hummel or a havior if you can, but don't shoot the Switcher." The stag seemed really to understand, and seemed to delight in get-ting in the way of a rifle. However, in 1898 he went to Kinlochawe, and was 40.00@50.00.
