But it is precisely this process of disintegration that is causing a great deal of present dissatisfaction, for until now the members of the social artistocracy have been, so to speak, on a plane, and any attempt, therefore, on the part of the socialled leaders to discriminate among them is regented. Unfortunately in society the natural laws of propinquity or mutual interests most likely have nothing apparently to do with causing certain people to associate with one another. In this country there is a preminent set to which all who consider themselves in the "swim" wish to belong, and that it must necessarily comprise only a small portion of those who

"Only think, my dear," said a well-preserved woman of society, "when I was a young girl I knew everyone in New York who kept a carriage."

Such a remark emphasizes more than anything else the immense social changes of the last fifty years—a growth which may be likened to the transformation of a slender sapling to a mighty tree, spreading forth its branches and roots in every direction. The increase in the numbers and the complexity of the interests of the new fashionable aspirants have called for a new adjustment of mathematical spiral spiral

The Recorder of Richmond, Va., printed in 1803, is without doubt the most novel of the collection. It is printed in old style English and contains among other chings an ad offering a reward for the return of a runaway slave. In the collection are copies of the Saturday Evening Post of Philadelphia, printed in 1829, and the Federal Republican of Georgetown, published in 1813.

These papers have been kept tied up in a cloth and though discolored from old age are still in very good condition.

Prongunced a Fiasco.

Pronounced a Fiasco. All the Nationalist organs describe the result of the trial as a fiasco for the government after the flourish of trumpets with which it announced the discovery of a great plot against the republic.

They insist that the whole indictment fizzled out, and that the acquittal of M. Buffet's fellow-royalist prisoners disposes of the charge of a royalist conspiracy. Moreover, they declare that the evidence proved that M. Deroulede has always been a political enemy of M. Buffet.

Paul Deroulede's record as a soldier of France explains the lenity with which courts and people regard his antics since he not long ago determined to become a disturber of the peace. He and his brother Andre promptly went to the front in the war of 1870-1 against Germany. Andre fell at Sedan and Paul was taken prisoner. All the Nationalist organs describe th

Proclaimed Himself a Traitor. When peace was restored M. Paul took up letters as a profession and within twenty-five years he has published seven or eight volumes of verse and prose and has been enumerated among the poets of France. Last spring Deroulede made an exhibition of himself by challenging Gen. Roget to march with him on the boulevard and proclaimed himself a traitor to the government. could not persuade people to take him Guerin's Fort. M. Guerin attracted international at tention by his strenuous efforts to be con-sidered a desperate foe to the govern-ment. When orders were issued for his followers, barricaded himself in a house in the Rue Chabrol, where he defied the military authorities for a long time. Guerin was prominent in the anti-Semite league, a notorious Jew baiter, and especially loud on the boulevards and in the restaurants. While he was cooped up in Fort Chabrol, with the police, fire department and soldiers stationed on all sides food was through to him by sympasides, food was thrown to him by sympa-thizers from the streets. It was finally decided to flood the place and drown him out. No country but France would have tolerated a performance so absurd or grotesque as this wordy Jew baiter defying the entire military force for weeks. Bitterly Hostile to Jews. Guerin comes of the breed that mad bitter as his hostility to any form of law. He and his followers are of the rabid and noisy class, but dangerous none the less. Real peril would appal them. Suffering Reaf peril would appai them. Suffering would wring screams from them, but they are dangerous, because they choose a time for a demonstration when the government is in straits and dare not take extreme measures. Imprisonment with notoriety is life and happiness to them, but real punishment without notoriety would quickly exterminate this particular brand of "patriotism."

ment," he says, and therefore he refuses to use it himself. As a matter of fact, it is very seldom that he spends any money on his own account. He left his mansion in Lindell boulevard to live among the poorest classes in St. Louis.— New York Tribune.

Good Manners.

There is no mark of breeding so distinctive as good manners at table. You may dress up to the latest fashion, carry your clothes as if born to them, stand the test of almost every trying position, and come to grief at the table simply because eating and drinking are ungraceful acts at their best. The process of conveying pieces of food to the mouth and washing them down with liquid requires all one's care and thought to provent it from raising disgust in the minds of observers.

Character in Chins.

A strong, projecting chin is an indication of an iron will and no small intelligence. Men and women so endowed usually succeed in all of their undertakings. A small, well-rounded chin, covered with moving pads of flesh, is an indication of a pleasure-loving disposition. If the chin is dimpled, it is a sign of coquetry, levity and untrustworthiness. But such persons are generally blessed with a healthy constitution and are apt to live to a good old age. A full, broad chin points to noble characteristics; if rather square and bony, it indicates an open, honorable, but determined person, who can hate as fiercely as he can love.

our first duty is to the living," he added rather abruptly, perhaps catching a glimpse of Arva's face, which was looking intensely pained. "I think that I had better remove this body now," he went on, "and arrange the tent for you.
I want to explore a little further, and you can be resting while I do it. Besides, it is breezing up, and you will be chilly."

This was true, as Arva's garments This was true, as Arva's garments were still far from dry, and a much cooler wind than before was beginning to sweep across the flat. The night previous she had removed a part of her uncomfortable attire, and had put it in the front of her bower to dry, while she made a coverlid of her abundant supply of seaweed; but the clothing was still damp and clinging. The rising breeze was more directly from the south than the former, and in this part of the world of course greater coldness was the consequence. The west and northwest winds would be warm and more or less moist, and those from a southerly direction must needs bring the chill of their Antarctic origin.

"I don't know," she said hesitatingly.

"Somehow, it don't seem just right to turn this poor fellow out and step in so. Yet, of course, that is only misplaced sentiment. Well," she concluded, with a little sigh, "one has to do all kinds of things under such pressure of circumstances. I will occupy the tent, if you

About Rugs.

In buying an Oriental rug one can distinguish between the imitation and genuine, not only by the color and pattern, which may be copied, but by a careful examination to see if each stitch is knotted, and it is impossible to pull it out, the rug is genuine Turkish, whether the warp is coton or wool, but if one can pull the stitch out it is imitation, no matter how closely color and pattern follow the original. The manner of testing the quality of the rug is as follows: A live coal is dropped on the rug and allowed to burn a little. When it is removed a yellowish mark will be left. If this can be brushed off with the fingers, leaving the original colors unaltered, it is sure proof of the genuineness of the rug.

There was a rough shakedown of dried seaweed and bushes covered with blankets on one side, and the rest of the space, except the center, was mainly occupied by boxes and cooking utensils. In one corner, however, stood a large seachest, and on this lay a few carpenter's tools. A barrel and two easks, all partly covered by a piece of canvas, stood near the chest. A casual inspection failed to bring out much more. The place was in fair order, though doubtless Keene had helped to make it so, and there was nothing to remind one that anything tragic had taken place there. However, a certain old military cloak had gone with its owner, and Keene had carefully picked up and put out of sight a "pepper-box" revolver with one chamber empty.

"I should say three-quarters of a mile," "As near as that? Then you could have seen human beings, had there been any around it?"

"Yes. That is, unless they had purposely hidden. There wasn't a soul to be seen. Oh, no, my idea is that it is entirely abandoned. Probably savages built it, and then were either all killed off oileft the island. You know we haven't seen the slightest trace of inhabitants."

"No; and the island is very small. Still, as you say, it is possible that someone may be hidden in this fort."

"Well, we can pretty soon tell. I shall explore it before long."

To be more exact, they were slippers, and had belonged to a woman. They were of fine material, with very high heels, and were a little worn. Next came several packages, each done up in a newspaper. On opening these they found, in succession, a short sword with a curved blade and a highly-ornamented but tarnished handle, a case containing two long-barreled pistols, and sinally three snuff-boxes. One of these last was of silver, but black-ened and slightly dinted, and the other two were of mere shell, or perhaps some kind of horn.

"Well, we can pretty soon tell. I shall explore it before long."

They were now at the shore and at onee mounted the ledges. Avra-looked eagerly in the direction of the supposed fort. Truly enough, upon a flat promontory that was now in sight, stood an unmistakable earthwork. It was not so very conspicuous at first, as its formation did not differ much from that of several neighboring ridges; but the careful eye could at once detect its uniformity of outline, and the exactness with which it began and ended. After looking at it long and carefully, Arva failed, like Keene, to see any indications of human occupancy. "No, I can't see a soul," she said. "Still, of course, it will be worth exploring later." No, I can't see a soul," she said. "Still, and a number of shintar articles. "No; I think the next move should be dinner. After that I should say we had better take account of stock. Our poor sailor is through with his effects, and we might as well begin to use them. We should soon have to in any case. But you look pretty tired, and we had better be getting back to the tent."
