It was done this way: A little more than a week ago a young man of good as it appearance called on Mr. Parkinson at his office and said he wanted to engage his office and said he wanted to engage his services as an attorney. He gave his name as C. E. Scott, and said he came West from Pennsylvania about a year ago with $5000, with which he purchased an interest in the stock farm of his uncle, Thomas Scott, near Janesville. A few weeks ago, he said, he had taken three carloads of stock to Chicago and sold them, receiving a little more than $3600. When he returned home his uncle was dissatisfied with the proceeds of the sale. They had a row over it, and his uncle told him they would consider the partnership at an end. He had kept the money he received for the cattle, the money he received for the cattle, about $3500, after deducting expenses, and would be willing to settle for $1500 more, being satisfied to get his money back. It was to secure this $1500 that he wanted Mr. Parkinson's services.

"Forget all that for the present. You can refuse her invitation later on if you like; for the moment all you have got to do is to come up to her, take your prize, accept your invitation, and beat a dignified retreat. There," laughing, "it isn't so much after all, is it?"

"When is she?"

"Where is she?"
"Over there, I think," pointing to where a group is gathered at the end of the tennis ground.
"Will you take me to her, Mr. Crawford?" asks Evelyn, turning to him with

"Certainly," and the three start off together towards the spot on which Miss Vandeleur is supposed to be. Capt. Stamer having refused to take his dismissal. upon unwilling Crawford and hauls him off, almost literally before he has time to off, almost literally before he has time to frame a defense.

It is a little way she has, so nobody minds her much when they have got over the first shock. Her manners are not her strong point, but her face is undeniably pretty in spite of her turned-up nose that adorns the center of it. Her eyes are bright and sparkling; her years are few; her knowledge of mankind large and unlimited; social laws are as naught and unlimited; social laws are as naught to her, and propriety as considered by the more sober section of humanity is a myth. Her husband, as will be readily understood, is an entirely secondary person in her menage, and but for the bursts of jealousy that about once a week drive him into prominence he would resolute.

So far as her acquaintances go, women, except for one here and there, she vigor ously refuses to cultivate, whilst in her eyes no man, however undesirable, is without his interest. Her gowns, the cut, the extraordinary variety of them. cut, the extraordinary variety of them, is a never-ending source of scandalous gossip amongst her set. She hunts in the season three days a week; in and out of season she flirts openly and thoroughly. Her hair is a bright red; her hands little models; need it be said she plays the banjo. Mr. Wilding-Weekes being a man of old family and large research. of old family and large means, no one has as yet plucked up courage to cut her though her detractors, mostly women, of course, would gladly have seen a safe way to doing so. Meanwhile she goes or her way rejoicing, careless of comment, and ever eager for the fray. She has one friend, too, of her own say Evelyn

Mr. Crawford being a new man is nat urally of supreme importance in her eyes naving inpounded him, nothing is left to Evelyn but to continue her way to Ma rian with Stamer as sole companion.
"For once Mrs. Wilding-Weekes has done me a good turn," says that young man with a laugh.

"Yes?" with unpleasant question in th me.
"She has sequestered Crawford—see?"
"No, I don't," immovably. "No, I don't," immovably.

"Oh, well, I do. Horrid old bore, isn'the?" "I think he is one of the nicest people ever met."

"You're easily pleased then." "You're easily pleased then."

"There is one thing, Eaton, that may as well be said. You have forced you society upon me, and as you compel me to endure it I must beg you not to say uncivil things of people whom I like."

"What on earth is the matter with you?" demands Capt. Stamer, turning sharply round as if to examine her fea tures at leisure. They have entered a laurel walk, and are, so long as nobod; turns the corner, virtually alone. "Hathe taught you to speak like that?"

"Nobody has taught me anything." "Nobody has taught me anything, says Miss D'Arey with much spirit "What I know I have learned myself and one thing my inner consciousness has evolved is, that I will let no man, or woman either" (with rising wrath) "speak to me as you have done."

"Look here," says Stamer promptly
"I know what you mean, and I know to that you have every cause to hate me; I should never have said what I did to you, even though I swear I meant noth ing uncivil by it. I wouldn't annoy you Evelyn. At this Miss D'Arcy, who has bee watching him out of the corner of he eye, after a severe struggle with he more dignified self, gives way to mirth.

"She did. She did. I give you my hon or," declares he fervently. "You see the prizes are going to be given away, and the duchess—"

As her vexed ways are always fo the good of others, and never for the good of herself, nobody minds them. She is a tall slight girl of about three-and twenty, with a singularly attractive face not strictly pretty, perhaps, but very lov able and full of dignity; the lips are sweet and suggestive of repose, of strength; the forehead is broad, the whole expression gentle, but firm. gentle, but firm.

"I would," says Evelyn honestly; and indeed Mrs. Vaudrey, badly gowned and all as she is, does look considerably Lady Stamor's innior.

"No-would you really?" says that matron, much gratified. "Well, perhaps there are people who wear worse. I must say you looked nice today, if you like"—this is a delicate return compliment. "I would see the duches took at temporal on the says of could see the duchess took a tremendous fancy to you, which was by no means agreeable to my Lady Stamer."

"Of me? of me? Nonsense!"
"There, there, so be it, as they say at the end of the prayers. But I have my thoughts, for all that. The duchess was civil to me too, didn't you think? But then her family and ours are old friends; you know all about that, don't you?" you know all about that, don't you?"

"Yes—all—everything," declares Miss D'Arcy with the vehemence of despair, yet hardly hoping thereby to stem the torrent. Nevertheless this time she escapes a rehearsal of the relations that once existed between the Saintons and her grace.

"No," says Miss D'Arcy, giving in evidently, but in so heart-broken a tone that both her companions burst out laughing. She is borne off forthwith to receive her prize, a handsome gold bracelet, and to receive also an invitation to the castle for the following week, which she accepts, with Miss Vandeleur's eye upon her; and presently the duchess sails away, carrying her train with her, and everybody else, feeling the day to be now really at an end, make their adieux to Lady Stamer, who is looking tired and bored. "Bessie's face was a picture when she came up and found me receiving her 'august guest'—that's what she calls her, I'll be bound. Did you see her? Ha—ha!" There is genuine, if malicious, mirth in her note this time. "She was green. The duchess disapproved of her gown; I could see that at a glance. Altogether too juvenile. But poor Bessie never could understand the date called yesterday. Thinks herself always young and beautiful; she's hideous, to my eyes. That hooked nose of hers would condemn her anywhere."

"No, neither bodily nor mentally. And to see her strutting about in that gown. Well! One shouldn't talk about it; anygate, and here she stops him.

"Thus far, and no farther," says she with just a little ghost of a smile. She has not yet forgiven him.

"Nonsense. I shall see you home."

"And be late for dinner, and have Lady Stamer's wrath hurled upon my head. No, thanks."

"You mean my society is not worth that. Well, it isn't. But I'll have plenty of time to take you to Firgrove and come back again to dinner."

"You really must not come," says Evelyn with a cold glance. "I prefer, I much prefer, to return home alone."

"How hard you are," says he, with a cold glance, "says he, with a cold glance, "I prefer, I much prefer, to return home alone."

"My dear girl! Is that you? Going home? I quite thought you had gone with the colonel and Mrs. D'Arcy. So fortunate. Now I shall have a companion, for your way is mine." The loud and piercing tones of Mrs. Vaudrey smite upon the air.

Capt Stamer smothers what—let us hope—is a kindly exclamation.

"Goodbye!" says he, holding out his hand to Evelyn. All hope of a tete-attet with her is now clearly at an end. "So glad you will have so delightful a companion as Mrs. Vaudrey. One would think," to that uppersions lets. "the series of many good gowns when I have only one? And I wouldn't care about that either if she wasn't so—. "Oh, thanks! thanks!" says Mrs. Vaudrey vaguely. She is staring at him with all her might. "Bless me, Eaton, what's that in your hair?" says she—"just over the tip of your ear."
"What?" exclaims he wildly, making violent dabs at the part of his person indicated. No one likes to think an one discated. No one likes to think an one pression that she is quoting Shakespeare.

"I don't really think she is as bad as wig or a caterpillar is nesting on one's head.

"There! it's gone," says Mrs. Vaudrey.
"After all"—with a careful examination of the ground at her feet—"I believe it was only a bit of twig; but it looked so odd, and I thought it moved. One can never be sure of those insect beasts. Gave you a shock, eh?"

"I daresay I'll recover—after you have yone," says he grimly. He is again holding out his hand to Evelyn. "Say you forgive me," whispers he hurriedly, tightening his grasp on hers. As he is plainly filled with a determination to hold her prisoner until pardon is granted. Miss D'Arcy wisely surrenders.

"Yes," says she. It is a bald make-up, but the smile that accompanies the monosyllable more than compensates for the poorness of it.

"Until tomorrow then," says he, lifting his hat. "Goodbye, Mrs. Vaudrey; safe home. I need not wish you better company."

He beams upon that offending lady.

"Id on't really think she is as bad as that," says Evelyn, rather startled.
"She is though. She is a regular snake in the grass! As if I didn't understand her! I should. She is my worst enemy; yet I have done that woman ever so many good turns from time to time—long ago, I mean, when she, the squire's daughter, was glad to know the daughter of a baron. Not that I boast, Evelyn.

It is, I suppose," says Evelyn rather startled.

"Well—it went off very well, didn't it?" said Mrs. Vaudrey, stepping out smartly beside Evelyn; one end of her gown is dragging gaily in the dust beside her, but that's nothing here nor there where Mrs. Vaudrey is concerned.

Perhaps it was the triumph of having conquered Eaton's determination to go home with her—perhaps it is the Christian satisfaction she ought to feel at having at last forgiven him.

"Well, so-so," says Mrs. Vaudrey, as if hardly pleased at the answer received. "There was a moment when I felt cerain we were going to have a shower." It is quite plain that the shower would have received a hearty welcome from one Bishop Grafton Going East.

Expansion, not of the union, but by the acquisition of possessions which are to be governed as dependencies, subject only to the will and caprice of our executive and congress, unrestricted by the constitution and without the consent and against the wishes of the people to be governed, who thereby become our subjects, is unjust and unrepublican; the government of the United States is thereby transformed into an imperial government for our possessions.

Rat Extermination in Sydney.

Even the bubonic plague is not an unmixed evil. It has led to the sanitary overhauling of Sydney, where a number of fatal cases have occurred, and it has developed a new Australian industry, rat catching. The authorities are firmly convinced that the plague was brought to Australia by rats in ships from the infected ports of India and the East. So a "war of extermination," to quote the words of the Sydney premier, has been proclaimed against the rodents in all the Australian seaports. Twopence a head is valid for the rate at the local town halls.

The principle of the balloon is found in certain fishes. The paper-making industry is paralleled in the building of a wasp's nest. In the mechanism of a man's body there are joints and levers similar to those used in engines. The automatic oiling of surfaces which rub together in an engine is on the same plan as the lubrication of joints in our bodies. Man's nervous system resembles the telegraph in its mode of working.

SUGAR AS A STIMULANT.

Swiss Guides and Canadian Lumbermen Aware of Its Value.

The Swiss guides fully appreciate the value of sugar as a stimulant, and always carry it in their kits, preferring lump sugar or highly-sweetened chocolate. The muscular lumbermen of Canada consum an extraordinarily large amount of sugar HOSTILITIES BEGUN. luring the season in the woods, taking it in the form of molasses. They sweeten their milkless tea with it, make cakes with it and even add it to their fried salt pork, which is the only meat they get pork, which is the only meat they get during the time they are in the woods cutting lumber, and this is practically half the year. In the "black belt" of Alabama the staple articles of diet are also molasses, salt pork and cornmeat. These simple articles form the diet day in and day out, year about, and yet the negroes seem to thrive on them. But it is on the sugar-cane plantations, perhaps, where the value of sugar as an article of diet is most apparent. A paniphlet where the value of sugar as an article of diet is most apparent. A paniphlet entitled "Sugar as Food," recently issued by the department of agriculture, referring to this fact, says: "For months the chief food of the negro laborers on the plantations is said to be sugar cane, and they are seen to grow strong and fat as the season advances. They go through he season advances. They go through he hard labor of harvesting the crop and come out in fine condition, although her bear it work and half stayed."

It should be added, however, that the ntire juice of ripened cane is more comlete food than sugar, containing, as it oes, other food constituents besides arbohydrates. Children have a natural craving for sweet things, and the sugar of milk, which makes up from 4 to 6 per cent. of it, forms an important part of baby's first nutriment, taking the place of starch until the child's stomach is able to assimilate it, so that a 2-year-old child drinking two quarts of milk a day consumes in this way about three owners of sumes in this way about three ounces of A lump of sugar contains as much nutriment as an ounce of potato and is far more easily assimilated. In times of great exertion, as are likely to occur in army life, this feature is particularly val-uable. In warm countries sugar takes the place of fat and either sugar or sweet fruits, as dates, figs, etc., are eaten in large quantities in tropical climates. As a source of muscular energy, sugar is rapidly becoming recognized, so that training diets are sometimes made to include large quanties of it, as, for in-stance, in the rowing clubs of Holland.— Philadelphia Record.

Exportations of Arms to China Prohibited and No Cipher Mes-

the Chinese legation at Berlin that all telegraphic messages must be in plain language and submitted for approval by the censor, and the suggestion of M. Delcasse, the French minister of foreign affairs, that the exportation of arms to China be prohibited, which are generally regarded here as long steps in the direcregarded here as long steps in the direction of treating China as a state engaged in war, have been supplemented this morning by the official announcement from St. Petersburg that certain portions of the Amur territory, including parts of the Knabarovsk district and the coast territory, as well as the towns of parts of the Knabarovsk district and the coast territory, as well as the towns of Blagovestchensk, Khabarovsk and Nikolskussuri, have been declared in a state of war since July 17. Russia's announcement is regarded in London as at least foreshadowing a speedy unconditional recognition of the fact that a condition of war exists between China and the civilized world, and the general opinion seems to favor such recognition as the best means of meeting the barbarian upheaval, while at the same time endeavoring to isolate the independent viceroys from the general conflagration.

Mature Has Foreshadowed Almost All of Man's Inventions.

Almost all of man's inventions have been foreshadowed by nature. The hypodermic syringe with which the physician injects morphine into a patient's arm has injects morphine into a patient's arm has reached here today from the Associated press correspondent with the allies:

Chefoo, July 19.—The taotai of Shan-tung, the highest legal official of the prov-ince and next in rank to the governor, has issued to the magistrates of the prov has issued to the magistrates of the prov-ince the following anti-Christian letter. It purports to record a conversation be-tween the governor and the taotai, but that is possibly a subterfuge to impose on the magistrates. The taotai is notori-ously anti-Christian, and his letter can-not fail to have evil consequences. The etter is as follows:

letter is as follows:

According to your remarks to me when speaking on the subject of Boxers, who declare themselves the enemies of all Christians, from the time of the settlement of the Pingyuan affair and Brooks murder, they have increased like a swarm of bees and their power has grown day by day. The provinces of Shangtu and Chi Li are filled with them. Beginning at Pekin and Tien Tsin, they have burned churches, murdered Christians and persecuted other people. On this account soldiers were dispatched, but the trouble increased so that it seems endless. it seems endless.

This calamity has as its source the native Christians who have clothed themselves with the power of foreigners. Relying on this power, the native Christians have insulted people to such an extent as to engender the greatest hatred, and the occasion has been taken advantage of by lawless men to carry out evil designs, as burning and robbing.

Applying the Remedy. What, therefore, can be considered a good method to stop the trouble? To stop the pot boiling over the fuel must be pulled out from below; but the native Christians are part of our people, and since they have been deceived by the foreigners they have lost the right road. If they could be brought back to the old pathway they would be our loyal people again. In this way mutual hatred would cease and tranquillity be restored.

Therefore, we exhort you according to the instructions of our government, and authorize all magistrates to compel native Christians to return to their former religion and make them give security that they will not enter again a Christian church. All furniture of churches and Christians is to be confiscated, and proclamations are to be issued exhorting the people to abstain from robbing Christians who renounce their faith.

This will be the best plan to cause the present troubles to cease and it is the duty of all wise and good men to consider this plan for stopping the present calamities.

He stated that he had received definite news that the ministers and forgregate on the granite rocks of the Bugong mountains, and the natives collect them by making smothered fires under the rocks and so suffocating the butterflies. They then gather them by the bushel and bake them on the heated ground, stirring them gently to remove the down and wings. Having sifted away the down and wings they either eat the bodies at once or make cakes of them, which resemble lumps of fat and have a sweet, nutry taste.—Newcastle (Eng.) Chronicle. Mary J. Kennedy, manager of Armour & Co.'s Exhibit at the Trans-Mississippi Exposition at Omaha, Neb., writes the following of Peruna, as a definite news that the ministers and for-eigners at Pekin, with the exception of Baron von Ketteler, the German minis-ter, were safe July 8. The imperial edict recalling him to Pekin, the viceroy said, was due to the Empress and Emperor, that Leonard Blaisdell, complainant, as attorneys in fact for the attorneys at law in the case, was not the proper person to bring suit. He intimated that the suit should have been brought by the administrators. He said it was strange that such a great property should have been so carelessly handled that all trace of it should have been lost. He held that the act creating the Pacific railroad sinking fund made it he lives very comfortable, indeed; he per-forms at the Metropolitan Opera house, which stands tolerably high among the theaters of the country; his band is to play at the Paris exposition. Why should he not talk about his later life? Because he is an Arcadian, and so knows what is dramatic and what is not.

ary act cannot be controlled by a man-Judge Hagner, in fixing the hearing of Judge Hagner, in fixing the hearing of the case for today, had declined to issue a rule against Secretary Gage to show cause why he should not deliver the bonds to the claimants. The petition as read to the court today says the disputed bonds were acquired by Charles Durkee, who died in 1870, that the bonds were then selling very low and that they are now in the treasury vaults or at least were seen there by one of the Durkee heirs in 1884. The government in its defense set out that the petition did not allege who were the heirs at law and their respective interests, nor did it allege that the matter was a purely ministerial function. The government contended that the secretary's power in the premises is purely a discretionary one.
