Kaiser-Hammen.

On Thursday, March 2nd, a pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Hammen, in the presence of many of the immediate families and a few friends, when Miss Norma Kaiser, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Kaiser, and Mr. Walter Hammen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Hammen were united in holy matrimony by the Rev. Kuene, pastor of the St. John's Reformed church. As the clock chimed the hour of three, the bride party entered the parlor to the strains of Merion's wedding march, played by Miss Frona Lubach, and took their places under beautiful decorations where the nuptial knot was tied. The bride was attended by Miss Hilda Hammen, sister of the groom, as maid of honor and Miss Lorena Held, cousin of the bride as bridesmaid, while Norton Kaiser acted as best man and Orin Kaiser as groomsmen. The bride was handsomely attired in white tulle and crepe de chine, with an over-skirt of Oriental lace, trimmed with pearls and carried a shower bouquet of bridal roses her tulle veil was in a caplike effect. The groom wore the customary suit of blue. The maid of honor wore an embroidered white voile, trimmed with silver beads, while the bridesmaid was gowned in white lace cloth. Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, where a delicious four course supper was served. The dining room was decorated in orange and white, with a huge wedding bell in the center, while the parlor was decorated in white, with a bell in the center. The evening was spent in music singing and playing various games, and Mrs. Hammen will reside on his father's farm which he recently purchased.

SUES MARSHAL FOR $2500 DAMAGES

Mike Gruber of The Town of Kewaskum Commences Action Against Geo. F. Brandt, Village Marshal

Sheriff Oscar Lemke of West Bend was in the village on Tuesday to serve papers upon Geo. F. Brandt, our village marshal, upon complaint filed by Attorney Duffy, McCreary and Duffy, of Fond du Lac, representing Mike Gruber of the town of Kewaskum.

The complaint charges that on the 13th day of January, 1916, Mike Gruber was falsely imprisoned in the police station of this village, and that the defendant asks $2500 damages.

This is a circuit case and no doubt will be tried during the fall term of court next fall, it being too late for the present term of court which convenes at West Bend on Monday, March 20th.

Mr. Brandt has retained Attorneys O'Meara and O'Meara of West Bend.

Not knowing the exact facts in this case, but Mr. Brandt being a village officer, we see no reason why the village should not uphold him in this action. Mr. Brandt always was a very efficient and capable officer of the village and deserves every bit of support that can be awarded him to win this suit.

OUR NEW PAT- TERN DEPARTMENT

See illustrations of Patterns Every Week. Send Coupon and Money Direct to This Office

By special arrangement we have added a pattern Department to our establishment. We will publish hereafter illustrations of every different pattern every week, which are very useful to each and every woman, girl or child. Look for these illustrations, and if there is a pattern or patterns which you would like to have, kindly fill out the coupon, which you will find with the illustration, together with the correct amount of money, direct to this office.

When ordering a pattern always be sure to allow about one week or so for your pattern, as the money upon receipt from you must be forwarded to the Pattern House at New York.

You will find that no pattern will cost more than 10 cents this alone will be a saving for you. Instead of paying 15 cents or more for a pattern, why not take advantage of our new department. Tell your neighbors and friends about this new arrangement.

Library Notes

Among the new books that have arrived and are now ready for circulation are:

"The Street of Seven Stars," by Mary Roberts Rhinehart, a story of American musicians in Vienna. Johnny Applissee by Eleanor Atkinson, a sympathetic interpretation of a real character.

The romance of Billy Gost, by Edna McChesney and Co., by Edna McChesney. In this volume we meet again many of Miss Ferner's ever popular characters. This time Edna McChesney takes a hand in the matrimony game herself. As Mrs. T. A. Buck of the Featherloom Petticoat Co., she has some amusing domestic experiences and as a dictator of women's fashion she keeps things humming in the business world in her characteristic way.

"The Story of Julia Page" by Katherine Norris, Julia Page, a daughter grew up in rather unpromising surroundings, Julia Page hungered for better things in life and was determined to have the mat all cost.

A Romance of Billy Gost Hill by Alice Hegan Rice, a Kentucky story with Miss Lady adored by every inhabitant of Billy Gost Hill.

These are only a few of the one hundred and sixty-six books we received.

John Guldán Passes Away

John Guldán, aged 77 years, 10 months and 9 days, passed away at his home in the town of Kewaskum near St. Bridget's last week Saturday, March 4th, after a lingering illness of four years. Death being due to a paralytic stroke.

Mr. Guldán was born in Germany on April 25th, 1838. When a young man of 33 years old he immigrated with his family to this country, settling near Newburg, later taking up a homestead on a farm 1/2 mile south of St. Bridget's where he resided up to the time of his death. Mr. Guldán was married in the year 1861. Their union was blessed with four children who together with his wife still survive and whose names are Wenzel of the town of Kewaskum, George of Chicago, Katie at home and Anna, Sister Flora, of Victor, Kansas.

Mr. Guldán was one of the pioneers of the town of Kewaskum. He at all times was a very hard worker and a kind neighbor. He was a man who was held in high esteem by everyone who knew him.

The funeral was held on Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock with services in the St. Bridget's church and interment being made in the congregation's cemetery. Rev. Ph. Vogt of this village officiated.

We, the undersigned, hereby desire to express our sincere thanks to the many kind friends and neighbors who so willingly assisted us in our late bereavement, the illness, death and burial of our beloved husband and father, and to all those who paid their last respect by attending the funeral.

Mrs. John Guldán and children.

Real Estate Transfer

Last week Friday W. F. Backhaus of this village purchased the August Backhaus farm of 10 acres (located 1 1/2 miles north of this village in the town of Auburn, Fond du Lac county. Mr. Backhaus on Saturday again sold the property to Frank Schultz and Chas. Krahn. Consideration private. Possession will be given the new owners immediately.

Store is Greatly Improved

The interior of the A. G. Koch store the past week was greatly improved by the addition of a number of new show cases and counters. With the latest improvement the store now ranks as one of the most up-to-date general stores for the size of the village in the state.

How to Prevent Croup.

When the child is subject to attacks of croup, see to it that he eats a light evening meal, as an overloaded stomach may bring on an attack, also watch for the first symptom—hoarseness, and give Chamberlain's Cough Remedy as soon as the child becomes hoarse. For sale by Edw. C. Miller.

LOCALS ARE DEFEATED BY CEDARBURG

Game Was Very Close. Score Being 21 to 22. Rough Tactics Used by Cedarburg Lads

In one of the roughest games ever encountered by the local squad the Cedarburg five were victors over the locals at Cedarburg last week Saturday evening. Score being 22 to 21.

The local quintette outplayed their opponents at all times, and very often taught the Cedarburg lads some fine points of the game. If one foul was made by the street car boys, a hundred words of the fans, the local referee dared not mention the word.

Nevertheless the local boys report that they were very nicely treated after the game, as all forgot what happened at the time of the play.

Local Girls Win

The local girls basketball team, accompanied by Miss Alma Hemmel, journeyed to Lomira last Thursday for an encounter with the girl team of that village, and were awarded with another victory, winning the game by a score of 11 to 7. This victory again shows that the local quintette are the cream of the town, and the girl team of that village, up to the present time they have not lost a game.

Tonight, Saturday a return game will be played on the local floor whose unusual and quaint personality the author has succeeded in penetrating as she did into the nature of the real Grevfria's Kolby. All the poetry of our early frontier life, with its hardships and joys fills the pages of the book.

Edna McChesney and Co., by Edna McChesney. In this volume we meet again many of Miss Ferner's ever popular characters. This time Edna McChesney takes a hand in the matrimony game herself. As Mrs. T. A. Buck of the Featherloom Petticoat Co., she has some amusing domestic experiences and as a dictator of women's fashion she keeps things humming in the business world in her characteristic way.

"The Story of Julia Page" by Katherine Norris, Julia Page, a daughter grew up in rather unpromising surroundings, Julia Page hungered for better things in life and was determined to have the mat all cost.

A Romance of Billy Gost Hill by Alice Hegan Rice, a Kentucky story with Miss Lady adored by every inhabitant of Billy Gost Hill.

These are only a few of the one hundred and sixty-six books we received.

A Pre-Lenten Wedding

The marriage of Miss Theresa Haessly to R. G. Larsen of Milwaukee took place at the bride's home on Saturday, March 4th. Rev. F. Mohme of this village tying the nuptial knot.

The bride was attended by Miss Martha Haessly, a sister, while George Grabo of Milwaukee was best man.

The bride is a very accomplished young lady and has a large circle of friends. She is of a very kind and loving disposition and will without a doubt be a very faithful and loving companion for the groom.

The groom, who resides at Milwaukee, is a perfect stranger to us, but nevertheless, is a very industrious young man and a machinist by trade.

The young couple left on Sunday for Milwaukee where they will make their future home.

The Statesman extend with its congratulations and hearty congratulations and wishes of a very happy and prosperous married life.

Among those present at the wedding were: Mr. and Mrs. R. Larsen and family, Roy Mahne and Walter Smith of Milwaukee, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Hess and family and Miss Mabel Klug of this village; Mr. and Mrs. Christ Guggenbuehl, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Schaub and Edward Rauch.

BIG TRIANGLE PROGRAM SUNDAY

Dustin Farnum in "The Iron Strain" and Chas. Murray in "A Game Old Knight." Eight Reels

The much heralded Triangle Plays will present their opening program at the Opera House tomorrow evening, offering Dustin Farnum, in a most powerful and dramatic play, "The Iron Strain" and Chas. Murray, in a Triangle Comedy production, "A Game Old Knight." You don't know what comedies are until you see a Triangle one.

Just think of it eight reels in all Admission 15 cents for adults, and children 5 cents.

Facts about Triangle Pictures. These are the very same productions that are being presented at the Knickerbocker Theatre, New York City, at prices up to $2.00 a seat. Also at the Merril Theatre at Milwaukee.

On account of the length of the program the show will start promptly at eight o'clock, therefore if you want to see the whole program be there on time. Remember when the management arranged eight o'clock they will start whether there is no one in the hall or whether it is packed. You cannot afford to be tardy. Be there on time.

The Iron Strain is a five reel drama, and A Game Old Knight, a three reel comedy.

To The Boys in The Corn Growing Contest

Arrangements have been made to have the exhibit of the corn grown by the boys in the Corn Growing Contest, held in connection with the Farmer's Institute, given under the direction of the Schleisingerville High School on Saturday, March 15, 1916.

Boys who can bring their corn will please bring it early enough on that date so that it can be arranged before the opening of the Institute. Those who cannot bring their corn, will please send it so that it will arrive in Schleisingerville, on Friday, night, March 17, 1916.

Boys in the Elementary Contest will exhibit ten ears. Have the corn marked with your name and address, and the town in which you reside. Do not give the name of the town where you attend school. Do not send any money to pay express or postage. Corn will be returned at the close of the Institute. Address your corn to Geo. T. Carlin, Schleisingerville, Wis. Kohl's hall.

It is to be expected that all boys who were furnished seed will exhibit corn at this time, as the pledge to do so was signed by all boys enrolled in this contest.

Yours respectfully,
Geo. T. Carlin, Co. Supt.

SLEET STORM DOES HEAVY DAMAGE

Telephone and Telegraph Companies Suffer Heavy Loss. Roads and Walks Treacherous

A heavy rain falling Monday afternoon and accompanied by a freezing temperature spelled a heavy disaster for telephone and telegraph wires.

Wires were down on Tuesday morning in all directions. About the heaviest losers in this vicinity are the East Valley and Newburg Telephone companies.

Manager John Marx reports that none of the Theresa Union Telephone company's line leading out of the village were down, but nevertheless he was kept busy adjusting trouble for a few days.

The Wisconsin Telephone company and Western Union each had a crew of men in this vicinity on Tuesday and Wednesday repairing their lines. By Tuesday afternoon communication was again had for all points.

The damage, however, does not near equal that caused by the sleet storm a year ago.

Continued rain on Monday made it extremely disagreeable going Sidewalks and roads that naturally drain off were full with water dammed up by the ice and snow.

Jaeger and daughter, and Miss Lillian of Campbellport, Rev. Theo. Heisler and Henry Mauel spent part of the week at Oconomowoc.

St. Martin's church at Ashford was the scene of a pretty wedding at 10 o'clock Monday morning when Miss Elenora Berg and Hy. Mauel, both of that place were united in marriage by Rev. Theo. Toeller. They were attended by Miss Irene Berg, a sister of the bride, and Miss Alexia Mauel, sister of the groom, and Nicholas Mauel, brother of the groom, and Jerome Berg, a brother of the bride. Clarence Berg and Adolph Mauel were the ushers.

The bride was attired in a gown of white chiffon over silk crepe de chine, with pearl trimming, and wore a veil caught by orange blossoms and pearls. She carried a shower bouquet of roses and lilies of the valley. Miss Irene Berg wore a light green chiffon tulle gown, trimmed with lace and carried a bouquet of white carnations, while Miss Mauel's gown was of pink Georgette crepe with gold lace trimming. She carried a bouquet of pink carnations.

Dinner and supper were served at the bride's home, a company of a hundred and fifty being entertained. Those assisting in the serving were: The Misses Agnes Reischer, Rose Heisler, Isabella Thelen and Mathias Berg. Music and dancing were enjoyed during the afternoon and evening. The rooms were decorated with smilax and white crepe paper.

Mr. and Mrs. Mauel will make their home at Colby, where the former is employed as cheesemaker. Mr. Mauel is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Mauel and his bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Berg.

A Shipboard Romance

From Life.

"Isn't that young Griggs and Miss Deering?" asked the captain, peering down from the bridge at a dark spot silhouetted against the moonlit sea. "Yes, sir," replied the second officer.

"It's the speediest shipboard romance I've ever seen in all my thirty years aboard a liner," remarked the captain smiling.

"I understand they never saw or heard of each other until they met at dinner, Tuesday. Have you talked much with them, sir? I see they sit next you at table."

"Oh, yes, that's true. Why on the second dinner out he complained because there was no jewelry shop aboard. She looked as happy as a lollipop and blushed."

"When engaged within forty-eight hours. Going some? I suppose they'll be married by the American consul before they've been ashore an hour."

"Not a bit of doubt of it," grinned the captain. "True love at sight in this case, all right. Well, they have my blessings. I fell in love with my Missus the same way, but we waited three months. I'll go below. What's she making?"

"Nineteen, sir. Good night."

Two hours later there came a terrific explosion away down in the hold amongst the cargo. The ship trembled and listed.

"Women and children first! No danger! Time enough for all!" shouted the officers, as the frantic passengers surged about the life boats.

She was going down rapidly by her stern. There came another explosion, this from the boilers.

"All women and children off below!" bellowed the captain.

"Aye, aye, sir," answered the second officer.

"Married men next!" shouted the captain as the men began scrambling into the boats. A score of men paused bowed and stepped back. Young Griggs tore his way through and started to clamber into the boat.

"Damn you, for a coward!" cursed the second officer, dragging him back. Young Griggs yanked away and again clutched at the boat. This time the second officer struck him square in the face and he went down.

The boat load of married men was merely cut away, so low was the sail in the water. Then came a lurch, and the waves closed over the great ship.

The next evening the Associated Press sent out, from its St. Louis office, this paragraph:

"Among those lost was H. G. Griggs, junior partner of the Wells & Griggs Steel Co. He leaves a wife and infant son in this city. It is feared Mrs. Griggs will not recover from the shock."

Did You Hear About This?

You've heard of Mary and her lamb

While walking out one day

They came to where

With patient care

Maud Muller raked the hay.

The lamb began to gobble gay;

Maud called the critter names.

A battle keen

Then raged between

These two historic dames.

The judge came up and tried to stop

Their vehement dispute.

His chance was slim;

Both turned on him

And said he was a brute.

The Party to Which he Belonged

A young woman helping to pull a rural district to ascertain the political standing of the population stopped at a big house where a cross appearing woman answered her ring.

"Does Mr. Smith live here?" she asked.

"He does," was the answer.

"Could you," asked the girl timidly

"tell me what party he belongs to?"

"I can," answered the woman. "Take a good look at me," she went on with her hands on her hips, "for I'm the party he belongs to and the only one,

see."

No Trouble at All.

The Urbanite (visiting the suburbanite)

"A mile and a half to the station!

Great Caesar! How can you make a train

after a heavy snow-storm?"

The Suburbanite (smilingly)—"Easily my boy; the train is sure to be an hour late!"—Fuck.

Hard to Get.

"I hear you've got a government job now," one man said to another.

"That's so," answered the other.

The first man gave an envious sigh and asked:

"Is it hard work?"

"Not after you get it," was the reply.

Helping the Horse

At the railway station a nice old lady left the train and got into a cab.

The cabman said, "Gimme your bag, lady, I'll put it on top of the cab."

"No, indeed answered the dear old lady, "that poor hoss has enough to pull.

I'll just hol' it on my lap."

HINTS TO HOUSEWIVES.

Do not open a wet umbrella to dry it. Wipe it down with an old soft silk handkerchief and leave it to drain in a bath or basin, shut up.

Dried orange peel revives a neglected fire more thoroughly and quicker than anything else, but is a very noisy and splattery remedy.

To prevent hot water bottles "singing," screw stoppers down tightly as soon as they are filled and after they are taken into the bedrooms unscrew them for a moment to let the steam escape, then screw them tightly up again.

To prevent your hands chapping all ways wash them in cold water; but, if this is too Spartan for you, dusting them over with a little toilet oatmeal after each washing will sometimes prevent it.

To wash hairbrushes, mix together a tablespoonful of liquid ammonia and about a quart of water. Do not wet the back of the brush. Rinse in clear cold water.

MBK will burn quite easily, but this can be rectified in the following way: Pour the boiling milk into a clean pitcher and stand in a basin of cold water until quite cool.

To keep the leaves of India rubber plants firm and glossy, sponge them once a week with tepid milk and water, first washing them—if dusty—with slightly soapy water.

In ironing a garment on which hooks are sewn, care should be taken not to close the hooks. You can prevent this by placing flannel or anything soft beneath the hooks.

If there is no maid to serve the dinner, put a tray cloth on the wheeled tray and stand it beside you at the table. Dessert and side dishes can be easily served from this tray.

CONCERNING WOMEN.

California has a court composed of women.

Hawaii has a curfew law for girls under 16 years of age.

Nearly 3,000 single women in Pennsylvania pay an income tax.

One munition factory in Scotland is employing over 6,000 women.

Paris is to have a bronze bas-relief of Miss Cavell's execution.

Over 11,000 women are employed in the breweries of the United States.

According to Dr. Caroline M. Parrott, a woman can remain an efficient worker until she is 80 years old.

The eight-hour law for women in the District of Columbia has been upheld by the Court of Appeals.

The Women's Trade Union League of New York has asked for volunteers to investigate factory conditions.

Five Frenchwomen employed as school porters in France have sold in a single year 16,632 copies of the scriptures.

Kansas has established an industrial commission to regulate hours, wages and conditions of work for women.

Making the Home Comfy

Needlework.

One woman has laid in a supply of the simple Irish picot edging as a finish for some guest towels. The lace is sufficiently heavy not to look out of place on the huck.

If annoyed by breaking silk when sewing, particularly in overcasting where there is a hard pull on the thread, try drawing the fingers along the silk from the point where broken off to the end. Sometimes waxing gives further strength.

You may avoid bad spots in garments being remodeled by examining the goods carefully and outlining the holes or defective spots with thread of a contrasting color. These spots which might otherwise be overlooked, can thus be avoided in the cutting or can be put in an unimportant place.

Telephone tablets or pads may be bought ready to cover at any stationery store. The covers may be made of cardboard, covered with cretonne, or just a flap of some pretty colored mounting board. A silk cord is used to hang the tablet by the telephone, and should, of course, have a pencil attached.

Baby caps made in one piece are most attractive and also convenient, as they can be ironed flat and thus kept fresh and dainty. They are cut with a straight edge and a semi-circular edge, very much the shape of one side of a tea cozy. The straight edge is fitted to the face and the semi-circular edge drawn into shape by means of eyelets worked along the edge, thru which ribbon is run. Rosettes at each side are also formed of the ribbon. White ribbon with blue scallops and forget-me-nots embroidered on it, would certainly make a lovely cap for the baby. A cap of this kind for winter wear should have a lining of thin wadding and silk.

To prevent the lace yoke of an evening dress from being soiled by contact with the skin, line the yoke by hand with a piece of chiffon. When soiled by perspiration this is easily ripped out and a clean piece substituted.

Keep needles dry and shiny and the thread clean. Have an emery in every workbag or in its absence one's hair can be utilized. Thread or silk kept on spool cases grows dusty and the outer layer, if soiled, should be discarded.

Sheets which are wearing in the middle should be cut right through the center, the weakest parts should be cut away, and the sheet rejoined, with the sides now forming the center. If a sheet is too much worn to be remade it will cut up into towels for glass and china.

An experienced needlewoman suggests a list (which gives the various numbers of needles and cotton) to follow when sewing by hand. She advises a No. 9 needle for 70 and 80 cotton, when hemming and tucking; a No. 8 needle for 50 and 60 cotton for plain sewing, overhauling and overcasting; a No. 7 needle for 40 and 60 thread for gathering. When gathering or working buttonholes rub the thread over with a piece of beeswax. This will keep it from knotting and also help it to resist stain.

Always thread silk into a needle by putting the end of the silk that exists before it is unwound from the spool in the eye first. If the silk is put in from the end you break or cut, it untwists more easily than if it is threaded from the other end. Clip all bastings to be removed at five or six inch intervals. They can then be pulled out without wrinkling the fabric.

When you are sewing a great deal of work may be saved by the following arrangement: Place the sewing table on the left and at the right angle to the sewing machine; you can then turn from the sewing machine to the table without leaving your chair. If the scrap basket is placed at your right hand, all small bits can be dropped into the basket with ease, and save the after effort of picking them off the floor.

A convenient money bag is made by cutting two pieces of chamamois, each piece 3 by 9 inches. Lay the two pieces together and stitch the sides and on a line one inch from the bottom edge. Snip the unseamed part and the top to make the fringe. Fold the top back upon the right side and cut four slits in each half one inch below the fold. Run narrow chamamois through the slits and finish with knots or small tassels, or fasten with small snappers.

Recipes.

Omelet, Perceval.—Eggplant cut in squares and fried in butter, grated parmesan cheese beaten in the eggs—the omelet made in butter in which the eggplant was fried. The eggplant folded into it, seasoned with salt and black pepper.

Fruit Turnovers.—Two cups flour, two teaspoonfuls baking powder, one-half teaspoonful salt, two teaspoonfuls shortening, one-half cup milk, four teaspoonfuls seeded and chopped raisins. Sift flour, salt, baking powder into bowl; and shortening and rub in very lightly. Add enough milk to hold together; put on floured board; roll out one-half inch thick; cut into three inch squares. Put a teaspoonful of the chopped raisins in center, wet edges with milk and turn over, making it three cornered. Press together, brush top with milk and bake twenty-five to thirty minutes in hot oven.

DOG PATRON OF MOVIES

Shows Interest When Scenes are Exciting, but Sleeps If They Bore

Baltimore, Md.—Patrons of the morning picture parlor near the corner of North avenue and Charles street are accustomed on many nights to have rather an interesting companion who is just as ardent a movie fan as any one present. The visitor is a fox terrier, which regularly takes its place in the audience and behaves itself with full decorum.

Jack, for that is the animal's name, accompanies its mistress, Mrs. John S. Constable, of 328 East Twentieth street. Once in the movie parlor Jack must have a seat to himself. He sits up and keeps a close watch on the movements of the figures on the screen. Jack has little or no appreciation for parlors where there is not music, and, like the people, he likes the pictures of action best. If a picture is dead or monotonous the dog will often jump off its seat, and, lying on the floor, will quietly drop off to sleep.

But first of all Jack is a lover of music. Let him hear musical sounds coming from any building and he will insist on being taken in to listen to it. One of his favorite weekly jaunts is down to the band concert on the Falls-way. While the concert lasts there is little hope of getting the dog to go home. With his ears pricked up he will listen to the strains with delight and seems to take great pleasure in martial pieces.

It is hard to judge how far a dog can follow the action on the screen. Scientists claim that it is hard for them to keep their eyes focused on the screen for any length of time. Mrs. Constable says, however, that Jack keeps his eyes on the pictures and the occasional pricking of his ears and other actions show that he follows the action with a certain amount of appreciation. It is too bad that on a recent night when Jack was not there a picture in which a cat ran across the scene was flashed. However, some other dog had crept in and it created some excitement by dashing for the stage and making such an uproar that it plainly showed its disapproval of the cat's presence.

Jack has many other accomplishments. One of his favorite stunts is to go out each evening to meet Mr. Constable coming home from work. As soon as he meets his master, the dog takes the evening paper from him and brings it home in its mouth. He insists on going shopping, too, and must always be permitted to bring some of the articles home himself.

One thing he positively refuses to do and that is, stay home alone. In fact, he has a decided dislike for being alone at any time. When in the house he will always keep near someone and if only one is in the house he will follow that one from place to place.

NOTED CHICAGO SURGEON IS AID TO BLIND GIRL

Takes Her Home With Him and Declares "She Will See"—Touched by Her Story.

Los Angeles, Cal.—This tells how a Chicago surgeon, spending his vacation on the great desert is San Bernardino County, found in a small deserted mining town a pretty 14-year-old orphan girl, who had been blind from birth and suffering from severe burns sustained a few days ago. And when the Good Samaritan laid hands upon the sufferer, he discovered, he said, that the girl's sight could be restored.

Later the Santa Fe limited train took the physician, his wife and the little orphan girl on their way to Chicago to recover from her burns, and to be led into the light of vision. The girl is Lottie Smith. The physician is Dr. W. E. Klutz. The girl was living with distant relatives named Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Harnath, in the mining town of Ivanpaw, thirty miles north of Barnwell.

Some days ago the girl's clothes caught fire from the kitchen stove in the Harnath home. She was severely burned before Mrs. Harnath could beat out the flames.

There are no physicians in Ivanpaw, and the girl, it is said, lay for hours ill and without medical attention.

Then came the Good Samaritan. Dr. Klutz and his wife in a party of easterners motored through the desert. They stopped at the mining town. They heard of the suffering blind girl.

Touched by the story of the sufferer, Dr. Klutz visited her. He gave first aid to the burned area of the girl's body. Then he examined her eyes.

"She shall see!" exclaimed the physician. Then he begged permission to take the girl back to Chicago with him for treatment. The Harnaths consented, and full of hope that help would kill her pain, the little girl flitted eastward with her benefactors.

MANY SIGHTS HAS HE SEEN

Oklahoma Farmer is a Native of the Holy Land.

Depew, Okla.—There is a farmer living near here, Ibrim Shaffen, who was born under a venerable cedar in the classic Lebanon mountains, lived for some time in Jericho, attended school in Damascus, herded sheep near Mount Carmel, fished in the river Jordan and repeatedly bathed in the Red Sea.

Ibrim was crippled in his right foot while climbing down off the great pyramid in Egypt. He now raises cantaloupes and peanuts on a little farm in Creek County, Oklahoma.

Cut Down Infant Mortality to Low Ebb

Mothercraft means in simple language the art of raising children. The foundation of this simple rules and principles, which they can follow out in the home even though under unfavorable social economic and hygienic conditions. This knowledge must be practical and simple enough for moderately intelligent women to comprehend easily and to use it. Its efficiency depends upon its wide dissemination and the ease with which it can be learned.

According to the evidence collected from a large number of mothercraft schools in France, Belgium and England the few principles on which the successful management of infants depends are as follows:

1. Either breast fed or artificially fed infants should be fed at absolutely regular intervals and at not too short intervals.

2. Infants must not be fed more than once at night, preferably not at all.

3. Babies must not sleep in the same beds as their mothers.

4. Neither should infants be wrapped up in too heavy clothes nor have still binders which interfere with movement.

5. They must be regularly aired and regularly exercised.

How easily these few principles can be learned even by the least educated mothers is plainly shown by the remarkable decrease in the infant death rate in the European countries, where an effort has been made to distribute this knowledge by the various child welfare societies which have been in existence for the last few years. In some places it has been reduced as much as 50 per cent. Infants will live and thrive in spite of poverty and poor sanitation, but they will not live under conditions of bad mothercraft; and this is the lesson of schools for mothers.

During the last ten years 2,000,000 children (babies) have died in the United States. The large majority succumbed to bad mothercraft and were sacrificed at the shrine of ignorance.

Until recently only the diseased and treated by the physicians, but today the healthy baby is receiving its share of attention—a new branch of medicine has been created, which deals with the study of the child in health as distinct from the child in disease.

The great principle in vogue today is to prevent disease and direct slight ailments early so they can be cured before a serious disease results. By following these rational lines the infant mortality is bound to keep decreasing in proportion to the extent that these principles are followed out.

Taking advantage of your proffered advice, may I ask: Should a 2-month-old baby be fed during the night? Should the bands be loosened during the night? Should cold or warm water be given, and how much and how often?

U. L. McA.

Reply: A 2-month-old baby should be fed once during the night. The band should never be put on tightly. It may be made looser at night, but there is danger of its slipping up. Two ounces of warm water may be given between each feeding. Water must be boiled and given in a sterile bottle or cup.

VALUE OF NUTS.

By Mary Lee.

"We do not appreciate the food value of nuts in this country," Mrs. Happy Homemaker was carefully peeling the thin husks from a paul of fat brown chestnuts. "We eat them between meals or after a hearty meal and then complain that they are indigestible, and, of course, they are; if a fairly thick slice of roast beef were taken after the dessert, to top off a meal, don't you suppose that any overburdened stomach would object? And practically the same thing happens when we finish with nuts."

"Nuts have a high protein content, and a high fat content as well, and should take the place of meat in a meal; or, if served as a dessert, should make the whole course. I have been reading up on nuts. I am going to give a paper on them for the club and I have learned a lot of things."

"Almonds are always available in the markets and are so rich in protein and fats that a pound of shelled almonds is equivalent in food value to about three pounds of steak. At usual prices a good grade of almonds is more economical than the ordinary cuts of meat."

"Chestnuts are a staple food in parts of Italy and have a delicious flavor in soups, stuffings and sauces. Our own native chestnuts, boiled or served whole or roasted, make an excellent simple dessert."

"Hickory nuts, English walnuts, pecan nuts and filberts are not only palatable in muffins, cake and yeast bread, but adds to the food value in a rational way. Peanuts are rich in oil and protein. They are nearly equal to almonds in food value and are even more economical. Peanuts are too concentrated a food for eating between meals, or to be taken after a meal already sufficient; but they may take the place of meat in the meal, and peanut butter may be used on bread and sandwiches without butter. They, too, may be used with cake and cookies. Chopped nuts may be served with a variety of desserts."

"What I am doing today is according to the recipe of an Italian housewife. I am preserving the chestnuts for later winter use. She says:

"Roast or boil the nuts until tender, shell and remove the inner skin. Make a sirup with one pint of water and one pound of sugar, the juice of two lemons and the grated rind of one. When the sirup has boiled well add one pint of the blanched chestnuts, let simmer gently for half an hour or more, then seal up boiling hot in small jars."

"These may be served in many ways, either plain, with wafers, or with whipped cream over them. Or place a spoonful in a sherbet glass, fill up with frappe or

NEW "SIS HOPKINS" COMEDIES READY.

Fans Will Have Opportunity to See Famous Stage Character On Screen.

Film men are showing unusual interest in the forthcoming comedies which will feature Rose Melville, creator of Sis Hopkins, the famous stage character. Reports from insiders indicate that they believe that there is another fad on the way equal to the Chaplin craze and the fate of the comedies will decide whether wise film men really can say whether a player is to cause a sensation. The public is a fickle creature, and attempts to forecast its decisions meets with varying success.

But local fans will be able to state their own opinions very soon. The first of the Sis Hopkins comedies will be shown at local theatres the first week in March. It is called "A Flock of Skeletons," and after that a new Sis Hopkins comedy will be released each week. Kalem, which is producing the pictures, has promised that so many fans have been clamoring for something new in comedy. Slapstick has been done to death and it is certain that if the Sis Hopkins comedies bear out the promise of being an original type of comedy they will be heartily welcomed.

The Sis Hopkins comedies are being produced with the sunny atmosphere of Jacksonville, Florida, as a background. The company at work on the pictures numbers in its ranks many well known favorites of the screen and stage. Arthur Albertson, who has been seen as a leading man in Kalem pictures for some time. Richard Purdon and Mary Kennedy are among the players of the screen. Frank Minzey, long associated with the stage production of Sis Hopkins, is among the players. Olive West, who will be remembered from her work in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," and a score of successes, makes her screen debut in the new comedies. Another favorite who will make his initial screen bow is Henry Murdock, ranked among the best of the acrobatic comedians of the stage.

HOPE SPRINGS ETERNAL IN THE HUMAN BREAST.

Present-Day Amateurs To Be Future Stars of the Screen Plays.

"Some of the stars who have been the greatest favorites on the stage may fall entirely when put into film," said Mr. Oliver Morosoff when interviewed recently. "No matter how popular a star may have been on the stage, nor how great her success, she may be a fat failure in motion pictures. We may put her into one picture, believing that her stage popularity will remain with her to the end; but as soon as the picture is released, we may learn, to our sorrow and heavy financial loss, through the efficiency of the criticism that this star will not do for motion pictures."

"On the other hand, some girl may come along who never has had any stage or screen experience whatever, but who has a pleasing personality and a natural aptitude for acting. She may score in a picture from the very first and spring into national popularity within a year. Such a girl we call a decided find."

ALICE BRADY IS REAL NEW YORKER.

The World Film star whose rise to nation-wide popularity is due to dramatic ability and brilliance as well as to charm of person and personality is Miss Alice Brady.

Miss Brady is a New York girl who turned to the stage simply because it was impossible to resist the call of her natural talent in that direction. She was educated at the College of St. Elizabeth, in Madison, N. J., and soon after graduation made her first appearance in the metropolitan revivals of Gilbert & Sullivan operettas. She showed such great promise that she was quickly in demand and appeared in the leading roles in the productions of "Little Women," "The Family Cupboard," "The Things That Count," and "Sinners," both in New York and throughout the country. Between times she played leads in stock at Dayton, Ohio.

Her first venture in the film drama was under the World banner, in the picture "As Ye Sow." Then followed her hit in "The Boss." Since then she has been starred in a number of big pictures, including "The Lure of Women" and "The Back."

WIGS AND WHISKERS ARE ON THE WANE.

Wigmakers resped a harvest when the movies first became a popular form of entertainment, and they believed that this new amusement augured continued prosperity.

This prediction was warranted perhaps when moving pictures were first introduced. In the early days the slapstick comedy which introduced hideous and impossible characters met with popular approval. It was in such productions that the man with the funny hair and the impossible whiskers cornered all the laughs. There was no opportunity for the people to see anything more elevating.

But with strides which were swift and sure the moving picture show developed. The producers found that the public wanted reality more than burlesque. Then came the photoplay with its consistent story and real flesh and blood characters. The public showed its appreciation by sincere attention and support. Even the slightest touch of the unnatural in these true-to-life stories proved to be a jarring note. This brought the demand for types. Conscious producers now demand that the characters step from real life into the screen without artificial adornment. This demand for character accuracy is well illustrated in "The Gods of Fate," the new five-reel production. Every member of the cast is naturally fitted for his respective role. This adds greatly to the realism throughout this gripping photoplay. The thrilling scenes, the action and the characters from life, harmonize to bring a most artistic result.

"The Gods of Fate," is life itself and it is doubtful if there is a more complete production now before the public.

STAR'S MOTHER IN PICTURES.

In "Dimples," a forthcoming production in which Mary Miles Minter has the stellar role, the character of Mrs. Riley, her aunt, is played by Charlotte Shelby. It has been noted that there is truly a remarkable resemblance between "Dimples" and Mrs. Riley. There should be. Charlotte Shelby, in real life is none other than Miss Minter's mother. Mrs. Shelby was formerly a well-known actress, but has not appeared professionally for several years. However, she is always found with her charming little daughter around the studio, and when the company went South to make the exterior, Mrs. Shelby went along. Director Edgar Jones induced her to take a part in the production.

Mary Miles Minter's name was with the stage production of Sis Hopkins, is among the players. Olive West, who will be remembered from her work in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," and a score of successes, makes her screen debut in the new comedies. Another favorite who will make his initial screen bow is Henry Murdock, ranked among the best of the acrobatic comedians of the stage.

VALUABLE HEIRLOOM USED IN FILM.

Those who are interested in valuable relics and antiques will be given a rare treat when they view the shawl, which is worn by Miss Charlotte Burton in her portrayal of "Queen of the Dance Hall" in "The Craving," a five-part de luxe edition American Mutual masterpiece, in which William Russell has the leading role.

The shawl is one which has been in the Burton family for four generations, and is a magnificent example of the old Castilian work that was done in the early days of California. The heirloom has been on exhibition many times in various American cities.

MOVIE NOTES.

Life at one of the trading posts of the Northern Country furnished the theme for the story by James Oliver Curwood, which will be put into production by Director William Humphrey. Mr. Humphrey will take a company of players to the section of the country described by Curwood in his book. The story is now being pictureized by Edward Montague, who has adapted a number of books and stage productions for the screen.

Elizabeth Burbridge, who plays the leading feminine role in "Golden Lies," an Essanay three-act drama, is the grand-daughter of the late General Stephen B. Burbridge, commander of the first brigade, Thirteenth army corps, and military governor of Kentucky under President Lincoln.

Edward J. Peil has had a wide and varied theatrical experience. He is a retiring, modest young man, whose reticence has earned him the sobriquet of "Edward the Silent."

It is wonderful to hear Frederick Pusey discuss the careers of movie actors. Frederick, unfortunately, is falling behind in his school studies.

Darwin Karr, who plays the lead in the three-act drama, "The Prisoner at the Bar," was a travelling salesman for a knitting factory before he became an actor.

Harry Dunkinson, has received hundreds of letters complimenting him on his splendid interpretation of the part of "Boney," the half-wit, in "The Misleading Lady." He says he doesn't know whether to take it as a slam or a compliment.

The most realistic fight scene ever staged on the studio floor was filmed for "The Primitive Strain," a three-act drama, the action of which takes place in the frozen north. Edward Arnold and Hugh Thompson were the principals in the conflict and before the scene ended they were fighting in earnest. The struggle was supposed to take place in a crowded gambling den in the far north, and when the camera stopped grinding, four persons, who had been struck by chairs and bottles, were found seriously hurt. It was necessary to summon a physician immediately to care for their wounds. One of the extra men received the most serious injury. An X-ray examination revealed four fractured ribs on his right side.

The spinster who celebrates her birthday anniversaries usually does so in silence.

It's impossible for a man to say anything complimentary to a woman that will surprise her.

Many a girl imagines her surroundings are not in keeping with her air of refinement and culture.

Notes and Comment

Of Interest to Women Readers

Restless Baby.

If the baby sleeps lightly, wakes often and seems uncomfortable, it may be that something is disturbing him which can be remedied.

He may be nervous from having been tickled, played with or tossed about in the latter part of the day. Overstimulation is to be avoided, no matter what its source or what the age of the baby.

He may be too warm, too cold, or wet; there may be something scratching him, or there may be wrinkles in the bedclothing; he may be lying in a cramped position, or his clothing may be too tight. Perhaps he has been overfed, or has had something unsuitable to eat, or is hungry or thirsty.

The room may be too hot, too cold, too light, too noisy, or not sufficiently aired. The conditions which make sleep a delight to older persons affect the baby in the same way, namely, plenty of fresh air passing in a constant current through the room, quiet, clean body and clean, comfortable clothing, a good bed and suitable coverings.

A cold bath or a warm one, according to the temperature will help to induce quiet sleep. In the summer, when the baby is fretful and sleeps restlessly, a tub bath at bedtime will help to relieve him. A little baby should be turned over once or twice in the course of a long nap.

For the Housewife.

Hot water marks can be removed from japanned trays by rubbing with sweet oil. When the marks have disappeared rub with dry flour and a soft cloth.

When a filling of cocoon is to be used between the layers of a cake, ice both the upper and under side of the layers, and they will not separate when the cake is cut.

The latest idea in bedroom furnishing is to have the comforters match the window hangings. It is rather expensive, if the comforters must be made to order. If you yourself make the comforters and the curtains, you can carry out the idea without extravagance.

A trunk may be made into comfortable window seat by padding the top and covering it with cretonne. Use one piece to cover the top and front, and a plaited flounce for the ends. If the seat occupies a corner a pillow covered with the cretonne will be decidedly effective.

How to do up lace or net curtains and have them the same color as when new is something of a problem. When the starch has boiled and it still hot or boiling, put yellow ochre in and stir it all through until you have the shade you want your curtains. Five cents' worth of ochre in the powder will be sufficient for a large number of curtains.

Health Notes.

It is claimed that tea boiled with water and strained is a mild astringent lotion for lessening hair falling.

Were good, vigorous walking more generally and regularly engaged in by both sexes the necessity for gymnastics and other artificial substitutes would not be so apparent.

In view of the alarming increase in heart and arterial diseases, nervous troubles and insanity, as well as cancer, it is at least comforting to find from recent statistics that the mortality from diphtheria and cerebrospinal meningitis has been reduced nearly 60 per cent in New York alone since antitoxin was first understood. True cholera infantum, too, is rarely seen now that baby feeding has become a science, while the great epidemics of typhus and smallpox which used to sweep the country are practically unknown.

To cure hysteria, wrap mustard plasters about hands, wrists, soles and palms, and allow patient to rest.

Glycerin and lemon juice in equal parts on a bit of absorbent cotton is the best thing to moisten the lips of a fever patient.

For toothache, soak a bit of medicated cotton in oil of cloves or oil of wintergreen, and gently press into the cavity, and where this is absent bathe the gum and try the hot water bag.

Cooking Bacon.

Bacon when cut too thin is wasted in the cooking, as much goes out in the grease. If cut too thick the lean part is toughened in the cooking, as it has to cook too long to be done through. Although the usual method is to fry bacon, it is considered better if it is broiled under the gas blaze or baked in the oven. Much care is required in broiling to have the blaze low enough so that the grease from the meat will not catch fire. In both baking and broiling bacon much of the smoke is avoided that cooks object to when it is fried.

Inserting Wicks.

After many unsuccessful attempts to insert new wicks into lamps and oil heaters I devised the plan of dipping one end of the wick for about an inch into starch, either cold or boiled, and ironing until dry, writes a contributor to the Country Gentleman.

Soaking in cold water makes the washing of all garments much easier.

SKATING RINK ON ROOF OF A HOTEL.

An enterprising New York hotel has laid out an ice skating rink on its roof. Inclosed tea rooms circle the rink.

Dictates of Fashion

Still the saucy little turbans and toques are seen. They are among the spring models.

White flannel is novel and delightful for a morning dress intended to wear in the south.

A pretty white sport suit has a deep border, cuffs and short collar of rose colored corduroy.

Effective corsage bouquets are made of velvet ropes with black net leaves, edged with chenille.

Changeable silk coats are promised for the spring. They are prettiest trimmed with silk ruchings.

NEEDLEWORK NOTES.

A pair of baby pins to hold the little sleeves the right length or to pin the small yoke or bib, can be fashioned from two of the tiny gilt safety pins, by sewing a small chiffon rose and a few green leaves in the center of each pin. The rose is formed by wrapping a double fold of chiffon around and around until the desired size is attained, while the leaves are formed by cutting bits of satin into the correct shape. Roses made of ribbon, or forget-me-nots of chiffon or ribbon would look as well.

Attractive skirt hangers can be made of crochet. Left over crochet cotton can be utilized in this way, as only about nineteen rows of double crochet, a little over an inch in width, are needed for the hangers. The first row is crocheted in an ivory ring, taking single stitches over the ring. Double crochet stitches are the taken back and forth until the desired length, which should be about nineteen rows, is completed; the last row being crocheted over the bar on a large gilt safety pin. These hangers are more unusual than those made of ribbon and also more practical, as they have a certain elasticity. Mercerized crochet cotton or fiber crochet silk may be used.

HINTS FOR POULTRY FANCIERS.

Now is the time to think about your incubator. If you want early fall layers start the machine going, especially in this good advice to those keeping the heavier breeds.

Don't fail to visit the poultry house at night. It is the only way you can determine whether or not the air is pure. If you find it stifling lose no time in providing more ventilation. This is very important at all times.

Plenty of green food during the breeding season will assist fertility of the eggs.

Don't sell hatching eggs until you have tested them for fertility. If the fertility runs too low, better not sell any until later, or until your fowls are in better breeding condition. Possibly they are overfed.

Too close inbreeding is bound to result in a weaker future flock. When breeding for show purposes it is almost necessary to inbreed to a certain extent, but such breeding must be understood.

Should any of the birds in the breeding pens show signs of scaly legs, start treating them at once. There are several very good scaly leg ointments on the market which will eradicate this condition rapidly.

It costs all it is worth to be popular—but it is seldom worth what it costs.

In Kitchen and Pantry

For the Housewife.

To remove old putty from window frames pass a red-hot poker slowly over it and the putty will come off easily.

Dull brass may be treated with a paste made from powdered pumice stone moistened with vinegar when it needs to be renovated.

When using bottled bluing the common tendency to pour in too much can be overcome by removing cork and cutting a triangular slit the entire length of cork. Reinsert cork and the bluing will come out very slowly. This saves pulling the cork out each time you have occasion to use the bluing.

Mash your boiled potatoes in the usual way, then add milk or cream enough to make them creamy, and also a pinch of baking powder. Then beat with an egg beater, adding salt last. When ready to serve put a chunk of butter on top. You will say you never tasted lighter or flakier potatoes.

Comparatively few people realize that the gas bill may be very perceptibly reduced by exercising care to light the gas properly. Hold the lighted match to the burner, then slowly turn on the gas. Most people turn the gas on full force, and then apply the match. A slight explosion ensues which affects the meter and sends it rapidly forward.

It is often difficult when you are hanging a heavy picture to get the screw to fasten into the wall, especially when the wall is only plaster. Try this plan: Enlarge the hole, wet the edges all around, fill in with moistened plaster of paris, and screw the nail into the plaster while it is soft. You will find the screw quite firm as soon as plaster is dry.

If a joint of meat should be too underdone to eat and several slices have been carved out it can be cooked again and served as a fresh joint if the hole is filled up with mashed potatoes and it is cooked in a brisk oven for an hour. The browned potatoes will be much appreciated and the fact that it is the second time of sending it to table will not be noticed.

Recipes.

Coffee Cake.—Two-thirds cake yeast, one-quarter cup lukewarm water, one cup scalded milk, one-quarter cup shortening, one-quarter cup sugar, one-half teaspoon salt, one egg, about three cups flour. Melt shortening in the milk, add sugar and salt, when lukewarm add the yeast, mixed with lukewarm water and an egg and stir in the flour. The mixture should be almost stiff enough to knead. In the morning it should be double its bulk. Cut through and through it with a knife and turn it over and over. Spread it smoothly in a buttered pan (about 10x5 inches). Bake about half an hour. Make a cooked paste of one tablespoon cornstarch and one-half cup boiling water. Spread top of cake with paste and one teaspoon of cinnamon. Return to oven a few minutes to melt sugar.

Ham Patties.—One pint of chopped ham mixed with two parts bread crumbs wet with milk. Put the batter in ramekins, or gem cups. Break an egg on top of each and sprinkle thickly with cracker crumbs, and bake until brown.

Caramel Custard.—Four cups scalded milk, five eggs, one half teaspoon salt, one teaspoon vanilla, and one-half cup sugar. Put sugar in omelet pan, stir constantly over hot part of range until melted to a syrup of light brown color. Of course a frying pan may be used, as you may not have an omelet pan. Add gradually to milk, being careful that milk does not bubble up and so over, as is liable on account of high temperature of sugar.

As soon as sugar is melted in milk add mixture gradually to eggs slightly beaten; add salt and flavoring, then strain in buttered mold. Bake as custard.

Chicken Salad.—Pick the meat from one hulled chicken, don't use skin, then cut up four bunches of celery, one onion finely chopped, four hard boiled eggs, one to be chopped into the salad, others sliced and put on top. Serve in a bed of lettuce leaves with mayonnaise dressing. If you have cold veal or pork left over use in same way. Use only strips of nicely browned bacon on top.

Never Be Sorry.

For doing your level best.
For your faith in humanity.
For being kind to the poor.
For hearing before judging.
For being candid and frank.
For thinking before speaking.
For discounting the talebearer.
For stopping your ears to gossip.
For asking pardon when in error.
For bridling a slanderous tongue.
For being generous with an enemy.
For sympathizing with the oppressed.

Glove Hint.

Do not draw gloves too tightly over the nails. There is a tendency for the hands to settle into the gloves, so that if the gloves fit loosely over the nails in the beginning the length of service is prolonged. Even then the nails persist in wearing thru the finger tips before the rest of the gloves wear out.

Kneading boards and such things should be kept in a cupboard or some place entirely free from dust.

Hot Water Cure

"There is nothing like a hot water bottle on a cold winter night!" observed Mrs. Crabbly. "It warms up the sheets so quickly! I'm sure I would be cold all night if it weren't for the hot water bottle."

"It is awful good for babies too, a hot water bottle is," seconded Mrs. Nippkins. "It cures the colic in no time, and helps my rheumatism."

"Well," said Crabbly, adding a masculine tone to the conversation, "the hot water bag is all right when it is hot. It will heat up the bed all right if you can endure the scorching of your toes to that end. But when a hot water bag is cold it is the coldest thing on earth. I would as soon have a toad in the bed with me as one of those things when it gets cold."

"A fellow jerks his feet up pretty lively when the water bag is hot, and he jerks them still more quickly when it's cold. It is certainly clammy. And kicking it out of bed onto the floor requires a great deal of science and perseverance."

"Filling a hot water bag is a very difficult performance, that is, to do the job neatly and without scorching yourself. You are supposed to grab the water bag by the ear aggressively to make it behave when you are pouring hot water into it."

"That reminds me" broke in Nippkins "that one of the most stubborn cases of something or other, I forgot what, was once cured by the hot water bag. In the case I speak of it effected an instantaneous and permanent restoration."

"Wallower had the worst seige of whatever it was that was ever known. It was an aggravated case. The doctors all gave him up. In fact, everybody gave him up except his wife. She continued giving him hot water bag treatments. He would start groaning in the night and she would get up and spatter hot water around and apply the hot water bag."

"He was flat on his back and couldn't move a muscle, and the doctors said there was no hope. At last his wife wore herself out and they hired a male nurse. This male nurse cured Wallower."

"One night Wallower was suffering terribly. He called for the hot water bottle, and said he wanted it hotter than ever. He wanted it boiling. The male nurse arrived at last, bringing the water bag forcibly by the ear. Just as the nurse was on the point of applying it to Wallower's back the dazed ear pulled out and the bag burst and squirted boiling water all over the patient."

"That cured Wallower. If it hadn't been for the interference of the other parties Wall would have killed that attendant. As it was he rolled him across the floor several times, and, if I remember right they fought up and down the stairs a couple of times."

"Hot water restores the strength awful quick when you get it suddenly and unexpectedly like that."

Silenced.

Judge Monroe of Louisville, Ky., vouches for the following legal anecdote illustrating the manner in which a browbeaten witness will sometimes retaliate upon an overzealous lawyer.

The witness in question was a farmer, and he was in court complaining that a certain neighbor had stolen some of his ducks.

"Do you know that these are your ducks?" asked the lawyer in a severe manner.

"Oh, yes, I should know them anywhere," was the confident answer, and the farmer proceeded to give in detail the various points and marks by which the birds might be identified.

"But these birds are no different from any other ducks," objected the lawyer. "I have a good many in my yard at home just like them. What have you to say to that sir?"

The farmer uncrossed his legs, crossed them again, expatiated, shifted his gird and remarked with an inimitable Long Island drawl: "That's not unlikely. These are not the only ducks I have had stolen in the last few weeks."

Amid a roar of laughter the smart lawyer sat down.

The One He Liked.

A young man was sitting in a barber's shop looking at a magazine when an old farmer, with little knowledge or appreciation of literary people, stepped up behind his chair and looked over his shoulder.

"Who's them?" he inquired, pointing to a group of portraits.

"Well known authors and playwrights," was the reply.

"Humph!" ejaculated the farmer, contemptuously. "Jist writin' fellers, eh?" Then he caught sight of an author with a long solemn face, and his eyes sparkled. "That's the one I like," he said, with decision, putting his finger on the writer's mournful countenance.

"Oh, yes; nearly everyone likes him," agreed the young man. "His humorous writings are—"

"Don't know nothin' 'bout his writin' but I like his face."

"Why so?"

"Cause he's the only feller that looks sorry for what he'd done."

Uncle Simon Bounced Him.

"I told Uncle Simon that he was getting too old and feeble to attend to business."

"Did he take it kindly?"

"He threw me out of his office."

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is Catarrh Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Rank Foolishness.

You occasionally see it stated that colds do not result from cold weather. That is rank foolishness. Were it true colds would be as prevalent in midsummer as in midwinter. The microbe that causes colds flourishes in damp, cold weather. To get rid of a cold take Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is effectual and is highly recommended by people who have used it for many years as occasion required, and know its real value. For sale by Edw. C. Miller.

The Coward

From Life

Johnson stopped at the edge of the clearing and looked carefully at the but. A few yards back where the spring crossed the trail, there were tracks of a woman's shoe pack. It was country where one didn't live long without the habit of noticing things. The tracks were light, mostly toes, and far apart for so small a foot. Johnson knew no woman traveled north so fast, into the wilderness, and without a pack, at that, for diversion, so he had sidestepped from the trail, and silently slipped off his tumpkin, and circled to the edge of the clearing, about a dozen yards from where the trail struck it. There in the shadow of the pines he searched the clearing with his eyes. No sign of life.

The door of the but was shut, but a couple of boards had been knocked off one of the window openings. The tall grass was trampled toward the spring. Over to the right was a wreck of a birch, where some one had been cutting firewood. Nothing especially alarming, but Johnson was not popular and a few early experiences had made him cautious. He stood there, silent, for perhaps fifteen minutes before he started for the door. There was still no sound, and he stepped inside, gun in hand.

A rusty little yacht stove, a few shelves, and a rude table were all the cook room contained. Beyond was the bunk room with a large double decked bunk against the wall, and opposite it the window. Johnson went on in.

In the lower bunk lay the body of a man with a hunting knife sticking in his breast. He lay staring at the ceiling with a rather silly smile, as though he had been grinning and death had come too quickly for it to fade.

"MacNamara—My God!" Johnson was unnerved. It was not often that men die by the knife in the North country. Then a great load seemed to leave his shoulders, for his dead man had sworn, not three weeks before to shoot him at sight—and Johnson was known to be a coward. No more need he sleep with an eye open, or slip into towns at night. MacNamara, thank God, was dead.

The dead man's pack was in the other bunk, and scattered around the room were hair pins, a small rhinestone ring, and a few other feminine trinkets. "Woman!" said Johnson—and then he saw the note. It was scrawled on the cover torn from an old magazine. It read:

"Ed you'll find this sure. Mac was going to lay for you and pot you at the White Rocks. I couldn't find you so I promised to come here to Carmels with him. When he climbed in the bunk I gave it to him—the damned fool!"

It was unsigned. The sun was very near the western hill top. Johnson went to the woods and returned with his pack; he dropped it near the stove in the cook room. Then he burned the note. Next he took a small bag of parched corn out of his pack and concealed in it the woman's little things, and put the bag in his shirt. There remained only one thing to do. Without looking at the dead man's face he drew the knife out of his breast and forced his own into the wound. The woman's knife he took to the door and hurried far out into the woods.

There wasn't much daylight left. He closed the door quietly and started for the trail north.

"I'll have to hurry" said Johnson.

Showing Off. Mrs. Jones was telling Mrs. Smith of the smartness of her son, a lad of 6 years.

He can read fluently, repeat the whole catechism, Lincoln's Gettysburg speech and weed potatoes as well as I can," she said.

"Yes mother," added the lad, "and yesterday I threw the dog in the well, let the canary out, kicked Tom Billings and stole Mrs. Smith's cherries."

Easily Satisfied. A teacher who is fond of putting the class thru natural history examinations is often surprised by their mental agility. She recently asked them to tell her, "What animal is satisfied with the least nourishment?"

"The moth!" one of them shouted, confidently. "It eats nothing but holes."

Safety First. "This safety first idea is pretty good stuff," said Pennsylvania Hungry as he sat down in a soft corner of his private box car.

"That's right," agreed Hobo Frank. "Every now and then you read about some guy or other who's been getting drowned in a bathtub."

The Theory. "I wonder why summer girls have the reputation of being forward?" "They are not really forward. You know it doesn't seem wrong to let a fellow kiss you thru your veil."

"Well?" "The same principle applies to a heavy coat of tan."

Admiration. "Bliggins is a remarkable fisherman." "Yes, I honestly believe it's more wonderful for a man to think up the stories Bliggins tells than it would be actually to catch the fish."

THE CHIEF LEGATEE

A STORY OF LOVE & MYSTERY INVOLVING STARTLING INCIDENTS, COMPLICATIONS & ADVENTURES.

By ANNA KATHERINE GREEN.

Chapters I to III—A few hours after marriage the wife of Roger J. Ransom is missing from the hotel where they have just registered. A detective, Mr. Gerrage, is called into the case. The bride, formerly Miss Georgian Hazen, becomes alarmed over something which happened while passing down the aisle from the altar.

While standing at the hotel deck with the groom the woman disappears. A man with a twisted face was seen whispering to the bride at the reception. Evidently flight was mediated after that meeting.

The bell boy noted peculiarities about the woman and was the only one who noticed her slip away. The detective claims the maid was a substitute for the wife, and rode from her house to the hotel while the wife hid in a basement door in the maid's clothes.

Chapters IV to V—The woman who hid in the basement door was traced to a meeting with the man with a broken jaw. Ransom receives a note from his wife who claims to have found a long lost twin sister, supposed to have been dead. The twin of unbalanced mind and stone deaf. Ransom meets the man with the broken jaw and who declares himself to be Mrs. Ransom's brother who was in need of money.

Chapters VI to VII—Ransom interviews his wife's lawyer, who insists that she has a twin sister. When leaving the office the boy gives him his wife's address.

Ransom goes to Stifford, Conn., and finds the hotel where his wife has secured rooms. He visits the cemetery and finds a man about the face of the tombstone the record of the death of the twin sister, which was supposed to have occurred years previously. He also finds the announcement of the death of the man with whom he had recently talked who claimed to be his wife's brother.

Chapters IX and X—Ransom learns that his wife, her sister, and the lawyer, are coming to the city. The sister who had left the coach for a walk appears later and he is surprised at the resemblance to his wife. He learns that his wife has had the lawyer draw her will.

Chapters XI to XIII—The inmates of the hotel were aroused by a piercing cry in the night. The sister declared that Ransom's wife had gone into the water fall to destroy her life. The mill stream never gave up its lead. A letter was found from Mrs. Ransom confirming the fact that she had died of life. Some doubt was expressed by the detective.

Chapters XIV and XV—After a full investigation of the house and grounds by both Ransom and the lawyer come to the conclusion that the woman remaining in the hotel and known as Anitra was Ransom's wife.

Chapter XV to XVIII—Ransom is convinced, after following several clues, that he was mistaken and that his wife had perished. The sister endeavors to win Ransom's love, but is repulsed.

Chapters XIX to XXI—The sister tells her story to Ransom, but fails to win him from the memory of his wife. His wife's brother appears who believes that Ransom's wife is masquerading as her twin sister, but is baffled by her actions.

She was babbling in a low tone to herself, an open sesame to her mind, which Ransom bailed with a sense of awe. If only he might distinguish the words! But this was difficult not only was her head turned partly away, but she spoke in a murmur which was far from distinct. Yet—yes, that one sentence was plain enough. She had muttered mysteriously, anxiously, and with a searching look among the graves: "It was on this side. I know it was on this side."

Watching her closely lest some chance glance of hers should stray his way, he listened still more intently and was presently rewarded by catching another sentence. "A single grave all by itself. I fell over it and my mother scolded me, saying it was my father's. There was a bush near it. A bush with white flowers on it. I tried to pick some."

Ransom's heart was growing lighter and lighter. She did not even know that there had been placed over that grave a monument with her name on it and that of the mother who had scolded her for tripping over her father's sod. Only Anitra could be so ignorant or expect to find a grave by means of a bush blooming with flowers fifteen years ago. As she went wandering on, peering to right and left, he thought of Hazen and his doubts, and wished that he were here beside him to mark her perplexity.

When quite satisfied that she would never find what she sought without help, Ransom stepped from his hiding-place and joined her among the grassy hillocks. The start of pleasure she gave and her almost childish look of relief warmed his heart, and it was with a smile he waited for her to speak.

"My father's grave!" she explained. "I was looking for my father's grave. I remember my mother taking me to it when I was little. There was a bush close by it—oh! I see what you think. The bush would be big now—I forgot that. And something else. You are thinking of something else. Oh, I know, I know. He wouldn't be lying alone any more. My mother must have died, or sister would have taken me to her. There ought to be two graves."

He nodded, and taking her by the hand led her to the family monument. She gazed at it for a moment, amazed, then laid her finger on one of the inscriptions.

He covered his chin with his hand. "I will try and explain," he replied. "If I am abrupt in my language, it is owing to the exigencies of the case. I have no time to waste and no disposition to whitewash a rough piece of work. To speak to the point, I have an intense interest in my sister Georgian. I have little or none in my sister Anitra. Georgian's intelligence, good-will, and command of money would be of incalculable benefit to me. Anitra, on the contrary, could be nothing but a burden, unless—here he cast a very sharp glance at Ransom—"unless Georgian should have been sufficiently considerate to leave her a good share of her fortune in the will you say she made just before her disappearance and supposed death."

"That I can say nothing about," rejoined Ransom in answer to this feeling. "The will is in the hands of her lawyer, but if it will help your argument any we will suppose that she left her sister to the care of her friends without any special provision for her in the way of money."

The steady fingers clutching the scarred neck loosed their grip to wave this supposition aside. "A hardly supposable case," was the cold comment with which he supplemented this disclaimer; "but one which would make the girl a burden indeed; a burden which for many reasons I could not assume." Here he struck himself sharply on the neck, with the first display of passion he had shown. "My advantages are not such as to make it easy for me to support myself. It would be simply impossible for me to undertake the care of any girl, least of all of one with a manifest infirmity."

"Anitra will prosper without your care," replied Ransom, overlooking the heartlessness of the man in the mad, unaccountable sense of relief with which he listened to his withdrawal from concerns for which he showed so little sympathy. "There are others who will be glad to do all that can be done for Georgian's forsaken sister."

"Yes. That is all right, but—" Here Hazen squared himself across the top of the table before which he had been sitting; "I must be made sure that the facts have been rightly represented to me and that the girl now in this house is Georgian's deserted sister. I'm not yet satisfied that she is, and I must be convinced not only on this point but on many others, before this day is over. Business of great importance calls me back to the city and it may be, out of the country. I may never be able to spend another day on purely personal affairs, so this one must tell. I have a scheme (it is a very simple one) which, if carried out as I have planned, will satisfy me as nothing else will as to the identity of the girl we will call, from lack of positive knowledge, Anitra. Will you help me in its furtherance? It lies with you to do so."

"First, your reasons for doubting the girl," retorted Ransom. "They must be excellent ones for you to resist the evidence of such conclusive proofs as you have yourself been witness to since entering this house. I am Georgian's husband. I have the strongest wish in the world to see her again at my side yet with the exception of her wonderful likeness to my wife, I find nothing in this raw if beautiful girl, of the polished, brightly trained woman I married. I have not even succeeded in startling her ear—something which I should have been able to do if she were not the totally deaf woman she appears. Confide in me then your reasons for demanding additional proofs of her identity. If they carry conviction with them, I will aid you in any scheme you can propose which will neither frighten nor afflict her."

Hazen rose to his feet. Narrow as the room was, he yielded to his restless desire to move about and began pace up and down the restricted quarters bounded by the edge of the table and the door. Not until he had made the second turning did he speak; then it was with seeming openness.

"It's like putting the torch to my last ship," he said; "but this is no time to hesitate. Mr. Ransom, I do not trust my eyes, I do not trust my ears, nor your eyes, nor your ears, nor those of any one here, because I have talked with a man who was on the same train with my sister. He noticed them because of their similar appearance and close intimacy. They were not dressed alike, but they were dressed alike and one did not move without the other. More than that, they not only walked about the various stations where they waited, arm in arm, but they sat thus closely joined in the cars all the way from New York. This interested me especially as he noted great anxiety and incessant movement in the one, and complete passiveness in the other. She who sat in the outer seat was watchful, busy, and ready to press the other's arm at the least provocation, but if either spoke it was always the other. It was not till the quick rush and shrill whistle of a passing train made one start and not the other, that he got the idea that one of them was deaf. As this was the one by the window, he felt that their peculiar actions were far accounted for, and indeed thus far it all tallied with what we might expect from Georgian traveling with the hapless Anitra. But there remained a fact to be told, which rouses doubt. When they reached G— and he saw from their quick rising that they were about to leave the train, he naturally glanced their way again, and this time he caught a glimpse of the inner one's neck. Her veil had become slightly disarranged, exposing the whole nape. It was unexpectedly dark, almost dark, almost brunette in color, and quite devoid of delicacy; such a skin as one might look for in the gipsy Anitra after years of outdoor living and a long lack of nice personal attention, but not such as I saw and admired a few hours ago on the neck of the woman bending over her work in the landlady's room. Oh, I recognized the difference; I have an eye for necks."

He paused, coming to a standstill in the middle of the room, to see what effect his words had had on Ransom. "I have that man's name," he continued, "and can produce him if I have time and it seems to be necessary. But I had rather come to my own decision without any outside interference. This is not an affair for public gossip or newspaper notoriety. It is a question of justice to myself. If this girl is Georgian—" His whole face changed. For a moment Ransom hardly knew him. The quiet, self-contained man seemed to have given way to one of such unexpected power and threat that Ransom rose instinctively to his feet in recognition of a superiority he could no longer deny. The action seemed to recall Hazen to himself. He wheeled about and recommenced his quiet pacing to and fro.

"I beg pardon," he quietly finished. "If it is Georgian, she must stand my friend. That is all I was going to say. If it is, against all reason and probability, her strangely restored twin, I shall leave this house by midnight, never probably to see any of you again. So you perceive that it is incumbent upon us to work promptly. Are you ready to hear what I have to propose?"

"Yes."

Hazen paused again, this time in front of the door. Laying his hand lightly on one of the panels, he glanced back at Ransom.

"You are nicely placed here for observation. Your door directly faces the hall she must traverse in returning to her room."

"That's quite true."

"She's in her room now. Ah, you know that?"

"Yes." Ransom seemed to have no other word at his command.

"Will she come out again before night to eat or to visit?"

"There's no telling. She's very fitful. No one can prophesy what she will do. Sometimes she eats in the landlady's room, sometimes in her own, sometimes not at all. If you have frightened her, or she has been disturbed in any way by your companion who shows such interest in her and in me, she probably will not come out at all."

"But she must. I expect you to see that she does. Use any messenger, any artifice, but get her away from this hall for ten minutes, even if it is only into Mrs. Deo's room. When she returns I shall be on my knees before this keyhole to watch her and observe. To see what I do not mean to tell you, but it will be something which will definitely settle for me this matter of identity. Does this plan look sufficiently harmless to meet with your approval?"

"Yes, but looks cannot always be trusted. I must know just what you mean to do. I will leave nothing to a mind and hand I do not trust any more fully than I do yours. You are too eager for Georgian's money; too little interested in herself; and you are too silly in your ways."

"You will!"

The words rang out involuntarily. It almost seemed as if the man would spring with them straight at the other's throat. But he controlled himself, and smiling bitterly, added:

"I know the marks of human struggle. I have read countenances from my birth. I've had to, and only one has baffled me—hers. But we are going to read that too and very soon. We are going to learn, you and I, what lies behind that innocent manner and herude, uncultured ways. We are going to sound that deafness. I say we," he impressively concluded, "because I have reconsidered my first impulse and now propose to allow you to participate openly, and without the secrecy you object to, in all that remains to be done to make our contemplated test a success. Will that please you? May I count on you now?"

"Yes," replied Ransom, returning to his old monosyllable.

"Very well, then, see if you can make a scrawl like this."

Pulling a piece of red chalk from his pocket, he drew a figure of a somewhat unusual character on the bare top of the table between them; then he handed the chalk over to Ransom, who received it with a stare of wonder not unmingled with suspicion.

"I'm not an adept at drawing," said he, but made his attempt, not without standing, and evidently to Hazen's satisfaction.

"You'll do," said he. "That's a mystic symbol once used by Georgian and myself in place of our names in all mutual correspondence, and on the leaves of our school-books and at the end of our exercises. It meant nothing, but the boys and girls we associated with thought it did and envied us the free-masonry it was supposed to cover. A ridiculous make-believe which I rate at its full folly now, but one which cannot fail to arouse a hundred memories in Georgian. We will scrawl it on her door, or rather you shall, and according to the way she conducts herself on seeing it, we shall know in one instant what you wish with your patience and trust in time may not be able to arrive at in weeks."

Ransom was about to proceed to take the first required step, when they heard a disturbance in front, and the coach came driving up with a great clatter and bang and from it stepped the lean, well-groomed figure of Mr. Harper.

"Bah!" exclaimed Hazen with a violent gesture of disappointment. "There comes your familiar. Now I suppose you will cry off."

"Not necessarily," returned Ransom. "But this much is certain. I shall certainly consult him before hazarding myself or—pardon me—of your self as to take any steps in the dark while I have at hand so responsible a guide as the man whom you choose to call my familiar."

CHAPTER XXII. A Suspicious Test.

LET him make his experiment. It will do no harm, and if it rids us of him, well and good."

Such was Mr. Harper's decision after hearing all that Mr. Ransom had to tell him of the present situation. Ransom expressed his satisfaction, and left the room with a lighter heart than he had felt since Hazen came upon the scene. He did not know that all he had been through was as nothing to what lay before him.

It was an hour before he returned. When he did, it was to find Hazen and the lawyer awaiting him in ill-concealed impatience.

"Have you done it?" exclaimed Hazen, leaping eagerly to his feet as the door closed softly behind Ransom. "I couldn't get hold of Mrs. Deo any sooner," replied Ransom. "Anitra is having her hair brushed, or something else of equal importance done for her in one of the rear rooms. So we can proceed fearlessly. Have you looked to see if you can get a good glimpse of her door through the keyhole of this one?"

"Very well. Here is the chalk."

"My father's name?" she asked.

"My father's name?" she asked.

He nodded.

She hung her head thoughtfully for a moment then slipping to the other side of the stone laid her hand on another.

"My mother's?"

Again he signified yes.

"And this? Is this sister's name?"

No, she's not buried yet. I had a brother. Is it his?"

Ransom bowed. How tell her that it was a false inscription and that the man whose death it commemorated was not only alive but had only a little while before spoken to her.

"I didn't like my brother. He was cruel and liked to hurt people. I'm glad he's dead."

Ransom drew her away. Her frankness was that of a child, but it produced an uncomfortable feeling. He didn't like this brother either, and in this thoughtless estimate of hers he seemed to read a warning to which his own nature intuitively responded.

"Come!" he motioned, leading the way.

She followed with a smile, and together they entered the highway. As they did so, Ransom caught sight of a man speeding down the hill before them on a bicycle. He had not come from the upper road, or they would have seen him as he flew past the gateway. Where had he come from, then? From the peep-hole where Ransom himself had stood a few minutes before. No other conclusion was possible, and Ransom felt both angry and anxious till he could find out who the man was. This he did not succeed in doing till he reached the hotel. There a bicycle leaning against a tree gave point to his questions, and he learned that it belonged to a clerk in one of the small stores near by, but that the man who had just ridden it up and down the road on a trial of speed was the stranger who had just come to town with Mr. Hazen.

CHAPTER XXI. On the Cars.

THIS episode, which to Ransom's mind would bear but one interpretation, gave him ample food for thought. He decided to be more circumspect in the future, and to keep an eye out for inquisitive strangers. That Hazen was antagonistic to him he had always known but that he was regarded by him with suspicion he had not realized till now.

It was now five o'clock and he was sitting in his room awaiting the usual report from the river, when a quick tap at his door was followed by the entrance of the very man he was thinking about. He rose eagerly to receive him, determined, however, to allow no inconsiderate impulse to drive him into unnecessary speech.

Taking the seat proffered him Hazen opened the conversation as follows:

"Mr. Ransom, I have been doing you an injustice. I do not consider it necessary to tell you just how I have found this out, but I am now convinced that you are as much in the dark as myself in regard to this unfortunate affair, and are as willing as I am to take all justifiable means to enlighten yourself. I own that at first I thought it more than probable you were in collusion with the girl here to deceive me. That I wouldn't stand, I'm glad to find you as truly a victim of this mystery as myself."

Ransom straightened himself.

"If this is an apology," he returned, to his feet in recognition of a superiority he could no longer deny.

"You will!"

The action seemed to recall Hazen to himself. He wheeled about and recommenced his quiet pacing to and fro.

"I beg pardon," he quietly finished.

"If it is Georgian, she must stand my friend. That is all I was going to say. If it is, against all reason and probability, her strangely restored twin, I shall leave this house by midnight, never probably to see any of you again. CHAPTER XXII. A Suspicious Test.

LET him make his experiment. It will do no harm, and if it rids us of him, well and good."

Such was Mr. Harper's decision after hearing all that Mr. Ransom had to tell him of the present situation. Ransom expressed his satisfaction, and left the room with a lighter heart than he had felt since Hazen came upon the scene. He did not know that all he had been through was as nothing to what lay before him.

Have you looked to see if you can get a good glimpse of her door through the keyhole of this one?"

"Very well. Here is the chalk."

"Haven't you already made a trial of that? Then do so now," suggested Hazen, drawing out the key and laying it on the table.

But this was too uncongenial a task for Ransom.

"I shall be satisfied," said he. "If Mr. Harper tells me that it can."

"It can," asserted that gentleman, falling on his knees and adjusting his eye to the keyhole. "Or rather, you can see plainly the face of any one approaching it. I don't suppose any of us expected to see the door itself."

"No, it is not the door, but the woman entering the door. We want to see. Did you ask for an extra lamp?"

"Yes, and saw it placed. It is on a small table almost opposite her room."

"Then everything is ready."

"All but the mark which I am to put on the panel."

"Very well. Here is the chalk. Let us see what you mean to do with it before you risk an attempt on the door itself."

Ransom thought a minute, then with one quick twist produced the following:

"Correct," muttered Hazen, with what Harper thought to be a slight but unmistakable shudder. "One would think you had been making use of this very cabalistic sign all your life."

"Then one would be mistaken. I have simply a true eye and a ready hand."

"And a very remarkable memory. You have recalled every little line and quirk."

"That's possible. What I have made once I can make the second time. It's a peculiarity of mine."

There was no mistaking the continued intensity of Hazen's gaze. Ransom felt his color rise, but succeeded in preserving his quiet tone, as he added:

"Besides, this character is not a wholly new one to me. My attention was called to it months ago. It was when I was courting Georgian. She was writing a note one day when she suddenly stopped to think and I saw her pen making some marks which I considered curious. But I should not have remembered them five minutes, if she had not impulsively laid her hand over them when she saw me looking. That fixed the memory of them in my mind, and when I saw this combination of lines again, I remembered it. That is why I lent myself so readily to this experiment. I lent that what you said about her acquaintance with this odd arrangement of lines was true."

MOUNTAIN ROADS BUILT BY CONVICTS

PRACTICALLY ENTIRE BED OF CANYON CITY ROUTE CUT OFF SIDE OF HILL

COST TO THE STATE IS SMALL

Warden Estimates that Within Ten Years 5,000 Miles Will Be Completed for $500,000

Colorado Springs, Col.—The Colorado Springs and Canyon City High way and the Ute Pass section of the Pike's Peak ocean to ocean road, recently completed by Colorado's system of convict labor, are two of the most perfect mountain roads in the United States.

For 20 miles south of Colorado Springs the road winds around the foothills and mountains, practically the entire roadbed having been cut out of the hillsides and in many places blasted out of solid rock. For the remaining 25 miles the way is over foothills and through undulating country. Besides being a marvel in engineering the road is one of the most scenic and picturesque in the west, passing as it does through Red Rock Canyon, Dead Man's Canyon and many other mountain beauty spots.

The road averages 18 feet in width, and is perfectly crowned and drained, although it offers a succession of climbs, so skillfully was the engineering work done that heavy grades have been eliminated and the motorist is confronted with only one grade as high as 3 per cent.

The Ute Pass road follows the ancient trail of the Indians across the Rocky Mountains. In the last few years that part of it between Colorado Springs and Cascade has been entirely reconstructed by convicts.

Under the Colorado system the convict is allowed 10 days off his sentence for each month of labor on the roads. This is an addition to the usual reduction for good behavior.

Thomas J. Tynan, warden of the state penitentiary, under whose supervision the work of the last three years has been done, estimates that in the next ten years 5,000 miles of the best road will be constructed at a cost of less than $500,000.

He says 1000 men have been used in road work in the last three years at a cost to the state of 25 cents a day for each man. The men go about their work unguarded, and less than one per cent have violated their pledges and made successful escapes.

COPS RAID "DIVINE DANCERS."

Put Ban Upon Home of Alleged Religious Sect.

San Bernardino, Cal.—In a raid on a secluded cottage known as the home of a religious sect bearing the name of "Divine Dancers," police arrested Ben Clark and Miss Betty McGrath, 24. With the arrest, the police declared, will come the disclosure of a peculiar form of worship in which the devotees danced without attire.

The bungalow raided was known as "Falm Cottage," and was hidden in a grove of palm trees. Clark and Miss McGrath were arrested on charges of vagrancy.

HEN THAT'S A MARVEL

Has Produced 144 Eggs a Year Since 1888, and Has Hatched a Thousand Chicks.

Killingly, Conn.—"Eusapia Palladino," the oldest hen in the town of Killingly and perhaps in the entire world, is to have a birthday party on the occasion of her 27th birthday, which will come in a few days. All the old hens in Killingly are looking forward to the event, and it is probable that a few young chickens will be asked, just to give the party a metropolitan flavor.

"Eusapia," though of Spanish origin, lays her eggs in English and began the work when but five months old. Her first egg, which her owner, Mr. James Blanchard still has, was laid in November, 1888, and since then she has laid an average of 144 a year. She has just laid another egg as this story is being written and only the greatest haste can prevent her laying another before it is completed. She just lays around all day, as might be expected at her great age. Unlike the Madagascar Bingle Hen, which lays square eggs with a monogram, Eusapia lays but one egg at a time.

Eusapia, it will be readily reckoned, was hatched from a black Spanish egg ten years before the Spanish-American War, when shells burst less frequently. She has seen a very active life and greatly deprecates the dissipation, irregular hours and loss of sleep incident to the poultry shows which have become popular of late years. She does not smoke, has never on any occasion partaken of alcoholic liquors and can now read without glasses if she cared to.

Mr. Blanchard has had several disputes lately with persons who, having dined at the Killingly Commercial Inn questioned that Eusapia was the oldest chicken in the world.

Of late years Eusapia has been given to fits of depression, and the admittance of eggs as parcel post mail left her on the verge of a nervous breakdown for days.

A thousand chicks have been hatched by Eusapia in her long and useful life. She has always shown a great interest in them, has personally supervised their early education and has invariably responded, even in late years, to their slightest creak.

RATS TESTING VALUE OF FOODS

KANSAS EXPERIMENTING TO REDUCE COST OF LIVING FOR WORKINGMEN

TWENTY-FOUR ANIMALS ARE USED

Each is Put on Special Diet and Weighed With Care Daily.

Topeka, Kan.—The state of Kansas has undertaken the job of finding out what meats and other foods are to be used by the housewife in her efforts to reduce the cost of living. It is intended that the same amount of nutriment must be obtained from the foods. The State Board of Health, the State University and the labor unions of the state are co-operating in the tests, which will take a year to complete.

The experiments are a part of the plans made some months ago by the university, labor unions and Board of Health for reducing the cost of living, particularly to the laboring men, who have definite amounts of money to spend each month for food and clothing, rents and for savings.

Prof. H. W. Emerson of the chemical department of the university is conducting the preliminary experiments with 24 white rats. Just now the experiment is being carried on with cured and fresh meats. When this is completed wheat flour and various kinds of corn meal and other flours will be tested and the rats fed on bread and biscuits from different flours and baked in different ways. Then fruits will be taken up and tested, as far as possible, in the same manner.

It has long been determined that a man of average weight and in good health and doing ordinary manual labor requires so much food a day and that certain foods have certain calories of energy. A man who ate two pounds of meat a day, with bread and vegetables, was capable of doing a certain amount of work. Kansas is going to try to find out what food-stuffs the housewife should purchase to get the most energy for her husband and sons and what she can purchase for the least money to get the best results.

The 24 white rats purchased by the state will find out these things for her. The rats were carefully weighed, even to the hundredth part of an ounce, and divided into twelve groups. One set is being fed meats artificially smoked; that is, smoked with liquid preparations used as substitute for real, old-fashioned hickory wood smoke. To another set is being fed meat smoked in the old-fashioned way. To another set of rats fresh meat is given. The other cages get the same sort of diet, but the meat is prepared in a different manner. One group has its fresh meat fried, another boiled and another roasted.

In addition to the meat the rats are all given exactly the same amount of bread and vegetables, potatoes, beets, celery and other vegetables. The amount of meat given each cage of rats is carefully weighed, and after each meal whatever is left is removed from the cages and weighed again. This will determine the exact amount of food consumed by the rats.

Each morning at 9 o'clock the rats are weighed to determine the loss or gain from the day before and also during the entire period. The meat experiment will be carried on for about three months, so that it will be possible to determine just the effect a steady diet of the same meat but with a variety of vegetables will have on the weight and activity of the animals.

When the experiment is completed it will be definitely determined whether fresh or cured meats, smoked, canned or corned, pork, beef or mutton is the best meat food, and by comparing the costs a pound of the different kinds of meat it will be easy to determine which gives the best results at the least expense. The experiment is expected to show whether curing meats, smoking, canning or corning renders the meats more or less digestible than when fresh, more or less valuable as food and which is the most tasteful.

CONNECTICUT SNAKE SWALLOWS CHINA EGG

Winsted, Conn.—Black snakes down Gales Ferry way cannot tell china eggs from hen's eggs, according to a story related by Mr. and Mrs. R. E. De Bussy of Mount Vernon, N. Y., who are guests of Colonel and Mrs. F. M. Chapin, in Pine Meadow. Recently Mr. and Mrs. De Bussy stopped with Miss Caroline Freeman at the Bowlerie, Gales Ferry. Miss Freeman's guests at that time included Prof. Heuser, instructor in German in Columbia University, and his family.

Prof. Heuser's daughter, 6 years old, returning from the poultry house at the Bowlerie, reported no eggs, but said a big snake was in a hen's nest. Growups, using an ax, killed the 5-foot snake.

Miss Freeman then discovered that the china nest egg was missing from the nest. The search led to the interior of the snake, where the missing china egg was recovered.

EASY TO SWINDLE WOMEN

Confessed Forger Tells How She Found Out Peculiarities of Signatures.

Los Angeles, Cal.—How she had originated an elaborate system to swindle other women and how about thirty of the most prominent society women in Los Angeles had easily become her victims, was told by Miss Sarah Elaine Barr, behind the bars of a cell in the City Jail.

Miss Barr, declared to be the most diminutive and dainty prisoner ever held in custody in this city, was arrested on a charge of passing forged checks. Weepingly she admitted the charge and explained how it had been easy for one small girl to swindle countless other women in the matter of their bank accounts.

"It was so easy," Miss Barr explained in her cell. "Of course to work a deliberate system one has to go about it cleverly, so I thought out my plan all myself. I was unable to get a position because of my small physique. I was a trained nurse but not strong. "One day I had to give a small sum of money. I knew a girl who had a bank account, but I did not know how she signed her name.

"That's how it all began and where I got my idea for my scheme. I called up her bank and learned her address. Then I called her on the telephone and told her I was a cashier and that some one had attempted to pass a check forged with her name. By questioning her I learned how she signed checks and, employing this knowledge I passed a check on her account for $15.50.

"I decided if it was an easy proposition on one woman it would be equally easy on many. So I built up my system and tried the same trick on about forty women more or less prominent here. I always used that system and it always worked. Now I'm sorry."

According to detective Nick Harris, who made the arrest, Miss Barr secured more than $400 by her "system" in three months.

One detail alone she overlooked in this system, Harris declares. That was her habit of drawing a long line after each signature. Yesterday the girl passed two genuine checks, drawing the tell tale long line as usual. The sleuth found her by this mark and, after being arrested, she broke down and confessed.

SAYS HE PREFERS HELL TO FUTURE IN HEAVEN

Infidel Writes Own Funeral Oration—Wants His Ashes Cast on Graves of Friends

Shenandoah, Iowa.—Cremated and half his ashes cast on the waters of the Mississippi in honor of those who have gone down to their death in the deep, and the other half scattered on the graves of ten of his friends is what Jerry Brown, a famous Shenandoah character who professes to be an infidel, states in his funeral oration, which he has already written, and wishes done with his body.

"But should the Christian story of Heaven and hell be true, and such men as Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, David and Solomon be in heaven, I wish my friends to check my baggage to the other station," says Brown in his funeral document. "Heaven may have a little advantage in climate, but hell certainly has the best society."

The ten friends who this second oldest Shenandoah citizen wishes to honor with his ashes are, Joe Van Baskirk, A. B. West, D. C. Wills, H. S. Holcome, D. S. Campbell, Charles Keenan, Dr. Cheschier, Henry Nesmith, Mrs. David Winger and D. E. Brubaker.

Whiners are Most Likely to Lose Liege Lords, Chicago Investigators Find.

Chicago, Ill.—When you see a large woman industriously engaged at a daily occupation you can feel assured she has a husband who sticks by the fireside and never dreams of desertion. Furthermore, if you see another woman hurrying along with two babies in her arms and anywhere from six to a dozen tugging at her skirts, you can wager all you have that she, too, has a husband who will never desert.

The prevailing idea that physically heroic women, because of their muscular superiority, often lead men to abandon the fireside, and that the wails and cries and tears of a house full of children have the same effect, has been exploded by the investigators of the Chicago Bureau of Public Welfare.

So hearken ye all to the wisdom of the investigators: "No. 1.—A physically large woman who is a willing worker is very seldom if ever deserted.

"No. 2.—Women of this type have the knack of retaining the affection and attention of their husbands and keeping the home happy.

"No. 3.—Wives who bless their homes with plenty of children are almost as successful in retaining the affections of their husbands. Large families, contrary to the general belief, is a guarantee of marital happiness and permanence.

"No. 4.—Wives who devote much time to preparing little delicacies for their husbands, who master the science of cooking who greet him with smiles and kisses when he comes home, are never deserted.

"No. 5.—Wives who greet husbands with the complaint that the children were cross all day, that little Charley engaged in a fistie encounter with little Hal the next door and cite other troubles are apt to be deserted any time.

"No. 6.—Wives of the clinging variety who want to tango, to do the hesitation whether the husband is tired out from his labors or not, often find themselves searching for their missing spouse."

The percentage of desertions it was found, is highest among American born. The Italians, it was discovered, seldom desert their wives. Seventy per cent of the desertions are due to the heads of the family being out of employment and worried over bills.

SELLING RATTLES

Stranger Is His Own Show Window and Comes Well Fortified With Snakebite "Cure".

Walla Walla, Wash.—Alfred Book of Wallula declared excitement here when he marched down main street with one big, live rattlesnake wrapped around his neck, another entwined about an arm and three smaller ones in a tin can, searching for a druggist who would buy them for their oil, which he said was valuable.

The man collected a crowd and a citizen insisted that a rattler had bitten Book in the hand. Two policemen took him to jail in an express wagon and searched him, but no signs of snakebite were found.

However, a policeman stated that Book appeared to have swallowed a quite sufficient amount of the "cure." Officers searched him gingerly, as it was reported he had his pockets full of snakes. The can of serpents was left in the street. Patrolman Gates killed them with a stick.

ROOSTER EATS 425 KERNELS

Novel Guessing Contest at Masonic Picnic in Iowa.

Sioux City, Iowa.—More than 1,500 Masons and Eastern Stars attended the picnic given at the Shore Acres Boat Club under the auspices of Isis chapter, No. 173, O. E. S. One of the entertaining features was a novel guessing contest.

A large rooster was allowed to go all day without any food. Contestants then guessed how many grains of corn the rooster would eat when fed. At 5 o'clock 2,000 kernels of corn were placed in the coop, and the bird was allowed to satisfy its hunger. After it had stopped eating a count of the remaining grains was made. It was found that the rooster had eaten 425 kernels. Miss Helen M. Miller, who guessed 425, won the rooster.

PRaises PASTOR; ROBS HIM.

Young Woman Steals His Wallet as She Lauds "Splendid Sermon."

Denver, Colo.—The police are seeking the smoothest woman crook this city has heard of for quite some time. She met Rev. R. S. Rex, a clergyman of St. Paul, Minn., on a downtown street.

"I want to congratulate you," she said smiling, as she drew close to the minister, "upon your splendid sermon at St. Mary's church last Sunday."

Later, Rev. Mr. Rex found he was minus a wallet containing $80 and round trip tickets to the California Exposition.

Kneading boards and such things should be kept in a cupboard or some place entirely free from dust.

For Maggie's Sake

"Come right in and sit down—here, wait until I dust the piano stool, and you can set on that. We hung onto the stool tho the installment men did take the piano. The children have got the chairs out in the yard building a corral for a Wild West show. But, goodness gracious! we had paid enough on the piano to entitle us to the stool, at least! Don't hand me your hat I ain't got no use for it. Just throw it down anywhere.

"So you are the new young man that is coming to see our Maggie—what's that? Oh, yes, she calls herself Margaret, but we named her Maggie, and she can't get away from that by calling herself Margaret. She says Margaret has got more class to it than Maggie, but I don't know about that. My name is Maggie, and she'll need some real class if she has more class than her mother.

"We're just alike as two peas; every one says so—same eyes, same hair same teeth. You wouldn't think so to see the smile that my teeth was false, would you? They are. Maggie'll have false teeth, too, before she is thirty. She's just like her mother in every respect. False teeth and baldheadedness run together in our family. Maggie's father was bald before I got him. Wasn't treating me right to come to me baldheaded, I think. Every woman that marries a man has a right to a head of hair to pull out.

"Of course the hair and the teeth don't make any difference to a man. It is the woman that a man loves if he is any kind of a man. If it was just the hair and teeth, he could buy a set of teeth and a wig and put them up in his room and never in the course of a long time have to buy a meal ticket for them.

"And where do you expect to go tonight, you and Maggie? You had not thought much about it? Oh, well, you can think about it while Maggie is getting ready to come down and while I set here and visit with you. I just asked because I am interested. You see I am Maggie's chaperone, and where Maggie goes I go. I ain't the kind of a woman to let my daughter take any chances, and you and me and her will have some great times together. Of course I know you are a nice boy, and that Maggie will be perfectly all right with you, but I want to sort of get acquainted with you.

"What's that? Oh, that won't interfere with my looking after the kids; their father can put them to bed. That's what I got him for. And I've been crazy to see you ever since Maggie told me what a fine new mash she had. And I wouldn't mind neglecting housework any old time to go out with you and Maggie.

"We're always interested in Maggie's fellers. She has lots of 'em, but don't keep any of 'em a very long time and I don't see why. I do my best to make them feel at home, and Maggie is just like me, only more of a talker than I am. She'll settle down after a while and not talk a bit more than I do. What's that? Will I tell Maggie that you have just thought of a telegram you've got to send, and that you'll be right back? Sure I will! And I'll tell Maggie that we're dead stuck on each other, and I'll get my hat on so's to be ready to go out with you and Maggie. Now don't be long."

Citified

A commercial traveler arrived for the first time in a small western town curing the night. In the morning he was awakened by whistles—shrill ones foggy ones, scale runners, high key, low key, and every other kind. So at breakfast he questioned the landlady: "Quite a manufacturing town you have here."

"Oh, yes—fine town."

"What kind of factories?"

"Walal," more slowly, "flour principally."

"Just flour?"

"Walal," very slowly, "yes, as yet; but the Metropolitan mill's a big one."

"Why, I heard a dozen different whistles!"

"Oh," edging his chair up confidentially, "them is all in the Metropolitan. You see, we got the whistles for the factories we're goin' to have an put 'em in to make the town sound lively. Seems quite citified now, doesn't it?"

For Happy Couples.

A happy couple were on their way to Scotland. They had to change trains at Carlisle, and an obliging porter, while struggling with the luggage noticed that the young lady's hair was dotted with rice. He approached the young man, and pulling a folded paper from his pocket said: "A present for you, sir, with the company's compliments."

"Indeed," said the traveler, "what is it?"

"A railway map sir."

"Oh, thank you; but what are these marks in blue pencil?"

"That's the beauty of it sir; these marks show just where the tunnels are and their length."

Thought of It First.

Census Man—"How old are you, madam?"

Lady—"Twenty-five."

Census Man (gallantly)—"You could easily say you were five years younger than you are."

Lady—"Oh, I done that already."

A mere man says the average woman always exonerates except when talking about her own age.
