Statement by Palmer. Following the meeting of the cabinet Attorney General Palmer made a statement in connection with the coal strike. It follows:

"My information is that the miners have submitted to the court the form of an order cancelling and withdrawfing the strike order. The strike order having been withdrawn, therefore the secretary of labor will invite the operators and miners to meet immediately to negotiate an adjustment of their controversy.

"I have been assuming at all times that the miners' organization would obey the law when it was; called to their attention in the way it has been, and I am giad that they justified this assumption.

"The way is now open to a settlement by the peaceful processes which should always be employed in the settlement of such disputes, without injury to the general public."

Brewster Invites Parley.

Thomas T. Brewster, chairman of he Operators' association of the central competitive fields, asked Acting President Lewis of the United Mine Workers to get the scale committees together Monday to negotiate a new wage agreement. The request was sent Lewis before Secretary Wilson invited the miners and operators to meet him in Washington Friday.

King Alcinous raised his hand with a gesture that could not well be denied. That led me-his invitation being accepted without further parley-to mention the idea I had conceived as I came along, of exploring those curious old ruined buildings.

"Tomorrow," he announced, "tomorment to lose. We will send Samson knows but that Monte Cristo shall ing fifty fathoms deep in mother-of- in comparison with the fantasies of pearl and the moon. It was the very our fearful wealth.

When we met at breakfast next morning, glad to see one another again as few people are at breakfast, it was Calypso and I- Well, he began again: evident that, as far as the "king" was concerned, our dream had lost nothing in the night watches. On the contrary, the opportunity of twining a scarlet of the race of Eternal Children, are its wings had grown to an amazing span and iridescence.

Calypso, it transpired, had certain household matters—of which the "king" of course was ever divinely oblivious-that would take her on an errand into the town. Those disposed of, we two eternal children were at liberty to be as foolish as we pleased. The "king" bowed his uncrowned head, as kings, from time immemorial have bowed their diadems before the quiet command of the domesticities; and it was arranged that I should be Calypso's escort on her errand.

So we set forth in the freshness of the morning, and the woods that had been so black and bewildering at my coming opened before us in easy paths, and all that tropical squalor that had been foul with sweat and insects seemed strangely vernal to me, so that I could hardly believe that I had trodden that way before. And for our companion all the way along-or. at least for my other companion-was the Wonder of the World, the beauti ful strangeness of living, and that marvel of a man's days upon the earth which lies in not knowing what a day shall bring forth, if only we have a little patience with Time-Time, with those gold keys at his girdle, ready, at any turn of the ways, to unlock the untarily made a gesture, as though hidden treasure that is to be the mean-

I asked, looking keep it poised, in that miraculous balover at Calypso with eyes that dared ance, 'twixt time and eternity-for this crystal made of light and dew is "The very same, my Lord Ulysses," the meaning of the life of man and woman upon the earth.

As we came to the borders of the Mr. Sweeney's reluctance in selling me wood near the edge of the little town we called a counsel of two. As the outcome of it we concluded that, having in mind the "king's" ambitious plans for our cloth-of-gold future, and for other obvious reasons, it was better that she went into the town alone-I to await her in the shadow of the mahogany tree.

As she turned to leave me she drew p from her bosom a little bag that hung by a silver chain, and opening it drew out, with a laugh-a golden doubloon!

I sprang toward her; but she was too quick for me, and laughingly vanshed through an opening in the trees. was not to kiss her that day.

Calypso was so long coming back that I began to grow anxious-was, indeed, on the point of going down into the town in search of her, when she suddenly appeared, rather out of breath and evidently a little excitedas though, in fact, she had been running away from something. She caught me by the arm with a laugh. 'Do you want to see your friend Tobias?" she said.

"Tobias? Impossible!" "Come here," and she led me a yard or two back the way she had come, and then looked through the trees. "Gone!" she said. "but he was there minute or two ago-or at least someone that is his photograph-and of course he's there yet, hidden in the brush, and probably got his eyes on us all the time. Did you see that seven-year apple tree move?"

"His favorite tree," I laughed. "Hardly strong enough to hang him was already for me the most precious on, though." And I realized that she was King Alcinous' daughter.

"A person?" I interrupted. "Yes! Suppose we say 'a pockmarked person; was it you?" "What a memory you have for de-

"Well, then," I said, "let's hurry home and talk it over with the 'king,' " The "king," as I had realized, was a practical "romantic" and at once took the matter seriously, leaving-word. "I always told you, dad," she saidand the word "dad" on the lips of that statuesque girl-who always seemed ready to take that inspired framework of rags and bones and talking music into her protecting armsseemed quite the quaintest of paradoxes-"I always told you, dad, what would heppen, with your fairy tales of the doubloons."

"Quite true, my dear," he answered. but isn't a fairy tale worth paying for?-worth a little trouble? And remember, if you will allow me, two things about fairy tales: there must always be some evil fairy in them, some dragon or such like; and there is always-a happy ending. Now the dragon enters at last-in the form of Tobias: and we should be happy on that very account. It shows that the ace of dragons is not, as I feared, extiuct. And as for the happy ending, we will arrange it, after lunch-for which, by the way, you are somewhat

After lunch the "king" resumed, but n a brief and entirely practical vein: "We are about to be besieged," he said. "The woods, probably, are already thick with spies. For the moment we must suspend operations on our Golconda"-his name for the ruius that we were to excavate-"and, as our present purpose-yours no less Cian ours, friend Ulysses-is o confuse Tobias, my suggestion is this: that you walk with me a mile or two to the nor'ard. There is an entertaining mangrove swamp I should like to show you, and also you can give me your opinion of an ides of mine that you will understand all the better when I have taken you over the ground."

So we walked beyond the pines. down onto a long, interminable flat land of marl marshes and mangrove trees-so like that in which Charlie Webster had shot the snake and the wild duck-that only Charlie could have seen any difference.

"Now," said the "king," "do you see sort of river there, overgrown with mangroves and palmettos?"

"Yes," I answered, "almostthough it's so choked up it's almost mpossible to say."

"Well," said the "king," "that's the idea; you haven't forgotten those old ruins we are going to explore. You remember how choked up they are. Well, this was the covered waterway. the secret creek, by which the pirates-John Teach, or whoever it was: perhaps John P. Tobias himselfused to land their loot. It's so overgrown nowadays that no one can find the entrance but myself and a friend or two; do you understand?"

We walked a little farther, and then at length came to the bank of the creek the "king" had indicated. This we followed for half a mile or so, till we heard the murmur of the sea. (TO BE PATINUED)
