CONNECTICUT

(Editor's Note: This is another in the "Stories of the States" series.)

By EDWARD EMERINE

Founded upon sincerity and stern virtues, it became the Land of Steady Habits, aristocratic in a sense and Yankee to the core. In June, 1636, two ministers, Thomas Hooker and Samuel Stone, with a band of 100, made their way from Massachusetts to the Connecticut valley and established Hartford, Wethersfield and Windsor amid the hostile Pequot Indians.

Three years later, finding that they were outside the borders of Massachusetts, the settlers formed a civil government of their own and adopted a constitution which stands unique in history as being the first written constitution of a self-governing people.

The Pequot tribe was driven out, but the people of Connecticut faced other problems. They had little of worldly goods. But they had Yankee genius, initiative, self-respect. They knew how to work the land and they learned how to manufacture the crude machines and tools they needed. It is significant that more patents have been issued to Connecticut inventors in proportion to population than to any other state.

Lead in Manufacturing.

In 1680 the first American carding mill was established at Wethersfield. Tinware was manufactured in Berlin about 1740. The first half-ton of American-made steel was produced at Simsbury in 1744. Hat factories, type foundries, oil mills and many other manufacturing plants were first for Connecticut. The cotton gin, invented by Eli Whitney, was manufactured in New Haven. The first factory town in America was established by Gen. David Humphreys at Seymour in 1806.

The Salisbury iron mines have been in operation since 1730, and furnished cannon balls, camp kettles and other articles for the armies of General Washington. Eli Terry and Seth Thomas perfected clock-making in Connecticut. The Yankee peddler, his wagon filled with scores of household articles, got his stocks from Connecticut factories. A land where life is none too easy sharpens the wits!

Industrial expansion brought Connecticut railroads, banks, insurance companies and shipping. Steamships and ferry lines now reach Long Island sound and river ports, and "Made in Connecticut" is known around the world. The Union Bank and Trust company of New London, chartered in 1792, is still doing business. The insurance capital of America is at Hartford.

The commonwealth of Connecticut is third smallest of the states with an area of only 5,604 square miles and ranks thirty-first in population. Approximately two million people live inside its borders, and yet there is room for an important agricultural industry. More than half the entire state is in hardwood forests. The eastern and western highlands are well adapted to dairying, the state's leading source of farm income. The river valleys and coastal plains have soil especially suitable for truck crops, tobacco and potatoes. Fruit growing and poultry raising are important too. Hay and

HISTORIC SITE . . . Connecticut is replete with historic sites. Typical is the war office at Lebanon where Gov. Jonathan Trumbull, Revolutionary war governor, planned the state's aid to General Washington.

Colonial Dwellings of Fine Hardwood Still Serve as Homes

Connecticut's early settlers, with axe and saw, felled many of the finest of the hardwood trees that were standing. Skillfully they split the logs, trimmed them into boards, and built them into spacious homes. Generation after generation these homes have stood, some of them more than two centuries.

More than a thousand homes dating back to colonial days are still fodder rank high in value. And Connecticut normally raises more corn per acre than any other state!

The state's large cities make marketing easy, and the Connecticut farmer has no need for a middleman. He sells direct—and realizes a bigger profit.

Compact State.

Connecticut is compact. No part of the state is more than two hours' journey from Hartford, the capital city. Its scenic areas are easily reached; its historic shrines just next door. Connecticut's early settlers built their homes to endure, and endure they have. With 1,000 inland lakes and 7,000 miles of streams, the state beckons those who like to spend their vacations near the water.

Whether it's the country school where Nathan Hale taught, or a mellowed old covered bridge, those who see Connecticut can lose themselves in bygone days. They may travel the hundreds of miles of trails in Connecticut's extensive state forests. They may visit the seashores and the mountains, enjoy boating and fishing, play golf and tennis or swim, or drive over well-kept highways through the countryside.

Miles of inviting beaches, rivers, lakes and rushing streams that retain in their names echoes of the long Indian past; picturesque woodlands, and innumerable historic monuments lure many visitors to Connecticut throughout the year.

With the first kernel of corn planted by the settlers in Connecticut there was literally planted the seeds of education. The frontier had its schools and churches early, and from a small beginning the state's great educational system has evolved. In addition to the public schools, there are 100 parochial schools of the Roman Catholic church, six of the Lutheran church and many others. Among the higher institutions of learning are famed Yale and Wesleyan universities, Trinity college, Hartford Seminary foundation, Berkeley Divinity school, St. Thomas Catholic seminary, St. Joseph Catholic seminary, and the Connecticut College for Women. The library at Yale has more than two million volumes, and its collections in Peabody museum are outstanding. Connecticut Agricultural college, coeducational, is at Mansfield. University of Connecticut at Storrs has higher entrance requirements than any other state college or university.

Yale university, New Haven, the state's oldest, was founded in 1701, but both Trinity in Hartford and Wesleyan in Middletown are more than 100 years old.

In recent years there has been a reversal of the trend that sent Connecticut people to other states. A few years ago it was said that some western states had more people of Connecticut ancestry than Connecticut itself. But today the tendency for suburban life, especially among those who work in New York City, has brought thousands to Connecticut's varied and scenic rural areas.

Among notables who make their home in Connecticut will be found such singers and musicians as Morton Downey, Nelson Eddy, Marian America's great insurance business started in Hartford with the writing of policies on West Indies cargo. The marine insurance business became permanently established there about 1803. In 1810 the fire insurance business was founded when Hartford Fire Insurance company was organized. Connecticut Mutual company began writing life insurance in 1846, and the accident insurance business was started by Travelers Insurance company in 1864. Steam boiler insurance, employers' liability insurance and many other kinds soon followed.

Another famous name in Hartford is "Rogers 1847." The Rogers process of electroplating silver was invented there in 1847.

Connecticut's old homes have changed little in outward appearance and retain the charm and simple beauty created in them by their designers and builders.

Guilford and Madison have dozens of these old homes. Wethersfield has one section in which the majority of homes are pre-Revolutionary. Windsor boasts of its old farmsteads, and Litchfield has a street lined with these charming old mansions.

Kathleen Norris Says:

Disappointed in Love

(Bell Syndicate—WNU Features)

"I am devoted to his little girls, to whom I am 'Aunt Dell.' But I can't get up enthusiasm over his offer of marriage."

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

"IS THERE any cure for hopeless love?" asks Adele Carpenter, who writes from a small town near Dallas. "My love affair is all suffering now, and yet I cannot reconcile myself to the necessity of giving up all thought of it. I am 29," her letter continues, "and have a good part-time job, and no financial worries, as my parents left me a half interest in a small but good business."

"Eight years ago my mother was stricken with a mysterious disease. She became physically helpless, and mentally a child. Shortly afterward a second cousin of mine, a young doctor, came to this town, and it was quite natural that he should make his home with us, and care for my mother. This began the years that were heaven to me. I cannot forget them, or get the joy of them out of my mind.

"We have always led a quiet and isolated life; my parents were Europeans, and we made few friends. Monty brought into my life companionship, interest, affection; everything was changed. Because of our relationship, my mother objected strongly to any talk of marriage, and for six years we concealed our affection for each other from her and all the world, eventually becoming lovers, although this was not long before my mother's death, and ceased afterward, when I began to plan to be married.

"It was then Monty came to me and told me that he did not care for me in the way he hoped someday to love a wife. My life was shattered in that hour, never to recover. He never wavered, never kissed me again, never softened the blow in any way. He quietly moved from the house, and for some days I did not see him. Once I sent for him, to discuss the settlement of my mother's affairs, but his quietly remote manner so chilled me that I would not try that again. Months went by; I heard that he was living with two other doctors and had entered partnership with them.

Politely Explained.

"Desperate and lonely, I sent for him and demanded an explanation of the change. He duly came and told me politely and regretfully that his feelings were not his to command in this matter, and that he simply did not wish to marry me. In my despair I suggested that we marry anyway, since there was no talk of any other woman. He smilingly and kindly assured me that that would not work, and went away. That was more than two years ago. I have met him since, but only in the most casual social way. He is 32 and has not married.

"Now my problem includes my late father's partner, now my partner in the undertaking business. Philip is a widower with children of 5 and 8. He has been having a wretched time trying to care for them, and he has always cared for me as a young uncle or brother might. He is a good man, no bad habits. In religion and background we are the same. I am devoted to his little girls, to whom I am 'Aunt Dell.' But I can get up no enthusiasm over his offer of marriage, and I still thrill and suffer over the memory of Monty. Would I have a reasonable chance of happiness, married to this dull, kind, plodding man? He urges it very eagerly, and I believe he would make a considerate and generous husband. Might I, as his wife, be cured of my earlier

He did not wish to marry her.

A DULL MARRIAGE

Love has its painful side, as many know too well. Adele Carpenter, who lives in a small Texas town, asks Miss Norris if there is any likelihood that she can forget her six blissful years of happiness, when she was in love with her second cousin, a young doctor.

Rather unaccountably his feelings changed. After her mother died, when there was no obstacle to their marriage, she expected that the long awaited proposal would come. It never did. Instead Monty moved away.

Adele has a chance to marry her late father's partner, a dull, good man, who has two young daughters. She is very fond of the little girls, but is indifferent towards their father. She wonders if she could ever come to love him. It seems impossible that she could ever forget Monty.

infatuation? My own friends naturally know of my love for Monty, but nobody knows how far that love carried us before my mother's death. Even by my old French servant that is not suspected. There would be no danger of betrayal. And it would be so good to get rid of this continual gnawing pain of cheated love."

My answer to Adele is that she has been too much alone; she has been cheated out of life by far more than Monty's coldness. She has lived in a cocoon; now it is time to wake up and spread her wings. Her isolated years, with her invalid mother, her unhappy love affair, have perhaps warped her a little, and made simple human living seem a complicated and fearful thing.

Deluding Self.

Two facts in your case are obvious, Adele. You are deluding yourself with your ideal of Monty. He isn't worth it. A few months of marriage to him would convince you of his selfishness, shallowness and general undesirability.

The second fact is that Philip needs you, and offers you a chance to make yourself loved and serviceable—two tremendously important elements in summing up a woman's happiness. Since you are completely self-deceived about Monty, you may well be so about Philip; he may prove a far more satisfactory husband than you imagine him to be. Your care of the two small motherless girls will win his devotion; your new position, name, home, responsibilities may well fill your hungry heart. Altogether, I would advise this marriage, and would confidently predict that it will be a success. But that earlier affair out of your thoughts, with childish follies and school mistakes, and go straight ahead into a dignified and useful career.

The violent passion you felt for Monty is a thing that never lasts. It never has and it never will, except in the imaginations of certain men and women who have nursed the shadow of it in loneliness and disappointment. All marriages fade into the bright commonplace light of everyday living. Living with any one human being is just as hard as living with any other. Your prospects with Philip seem to me far better than any with Monty ever would have been.

DDT Can Harm Pets

Cautioning dog and cat owners in the use of DDT to combat fleas on their pets, American Veterinary Medical association says the insecticide can cause fatal illness in household animals unless it is used with strict care. Cats are said to be especially susceptible to the poisoning because of their habit of licking.

"Never use oily solutions of DDT on the animal's body," the association warns. "DDT should be applied in the form of a mild dust."

Father Should Have Larger Role in Child's Rearing

The traditional view that bringing up the children is entirely up to Mother and that all Dad does is "bring home the bacon" has been "blasted to pieces by the findings of psychiatry," says Dr. Luther E. Woodward, field consultant, national committee for mental hygiene.

For every father of the last generation who got up to give the 2 a. m. bottle and changed at least one diaper a day, 50 fathers are

Noting this among other gains in good mental health, he said that children needed to grow up with two parents, or substitutes for them, to make healthy adjustments in their own lives later on.

Recognition that the family setting determines behavior patterns for better or worse was another of the contributions credited to psychiatry.

You would foot the bill!

Look out! There's another big railroad wage demand headed your way!

The non-operating unions alone—whose members do not actually operate trains—are demanding a flat increase of 20 cents an hour. These demands would cost the railroads of the country five hundred sixty-eight million dollars a year!

Last year these employees had an increase of 18 1/2 cents an hour. This was their third major wage increase since 1939. Their average weekly pay has gone up 75%, as against a cost-of-living rise of 54%.

Since 1939, railroad wage and material costs have gone up more than three times as much as freight rates, and five times as much as passenger fares. That is, why in 1946, with the largest peacetime traffic in history, the net income of railroads went down to the equivalent of only 2 1/2% of the net property investment.

What About 1947?

Even with the recent freight rate increase, preliminary figures indicate that the railroads will make only about the same low return in 1947 as in 1946. This will be because:—the wage increase made in 1946 will be in effect for all of 1947;

—special payroll taxes on railroads have recently been increased; —and passenger traffic has declined.
