TIF developer suing village for trespassing, contract breach

By Mitch Maersch
mitch@kewaskumstatesman.com

VILLAGE of KEWASKUM- Local developer Gary Gavin is suing the village of Kewaskum for trespassing and breaching the developer's agreement in the village's embattled tax incremental finance (TIF) district.

The lawsuit, filed in June, includes plaintiffs Gavin and his two land development corporations, Nature Haven LLC and Kewaskum Trading Post LLC within the 115-acre TIF district.

According to the lawsuit, in late 2004 and early 2005, Gavin discussed with the village developing the 37-acre Trading Post, located on the south end of the village along Highway 45. Gavin approved development plans done by engineers Ruekert Mielke Inc. and submitted them to the village.

The plan included two storm water retention ponds, leaving 27 developable acres. Gavin told the village the development plans were to maximize the number of developable acres.

During the same time, Bullseye

Construction LLC and United Construction Group Inc. (collectively called United) contacted Gavin and the village with plans to purchase and develop Trading Post and certain lots of Nature Haven Subdivision in a $100 million project in which Gavin says United Construction Group made a deal with the Village to pay back $8 million of infrastructure costs.

Bullseye Construction was tied to Laurance Chmielewski, a local resident and United Construction Group to his brother Gregory Chmielewski, a former Kewaskum resident.

Gavin entered into contracts to sell Trading Post and certain lots of Nature Haven.

The village negotiated a developer's agreement with United in which the village would do improvements for Nature Haven, Trading Post and other TIF District properties while the developer would do certain improvements to developer-owned properties.

The village, the lawsuit claims, did not inform Gavin on the nature or status of negotiating that agreement though Gavin still owned the land at the time.

The village presented Gavin with the developer's agreement on July 8, 2005, and said he must execute the agreement immediately if he wanted any help developing the property. The village told Gavin an amended developer's agreement would be done later to substitute United for Gavin and impose developer's responsibilities on United.

Gavin executed the developer's agreement, the lawsuit says.

United submitted a development plan for Trading Post that differed from Gavin's, namely in that two retention ponds were situated to decrease developable land by two acres. The additional acreage was taken from the most valuable portion of Trading Post, the lawsuit claims.

The village approved United's plan in part because it benefitted landowners in the TIF District other than Gavin, the lawsuit says. The village did not consult Gavin about the plan before approval despite Gavin

Kewaskum Township sets 2010 budget

By Kyle Zwieg
kyle@kewaskumstatesman.com

TOWN of KEWASKUM- A small crowd of electors quietly approved a 2010 town budget of $462,527.75 without comment Monday night.

The tax levy was set at $286,659, compared to $273,562 in 2009.

Town Clerk Nancy Boden said the tax levy rise is the maximum allowed by the state. Town treasurer Daniel W. Stoffel, who typically leads the annual budget hearing, was home sick.

There are numerous changes in this year's budget. The town will receive no funds from Use Value Assessment, one of four tax sources, for the second straight year, Boden said.

The town has also budgeted to receive $4,000 for the lottery credit and $6,300 for payments in lieu of taxes, Boden said.

"We only receive money from that if farmland has changed to be residential," she said.

The 2009 budget also included $2,547.36 in county aid that will not be available this year, Boden said.

Shared revenue from the state dropped from $34,523 this year to a projected $29,345, Boden said. State highway aid, however, will rise from $76,670.75 in 2009 to $78,192.75 in 2010.

The town will also apply for a $20,000 sign grant to replace aging and damaged road signs on town roads, Boden said.

The town's largest budgeted expenditure is its public works budget, which includes $131,300 for transportation and $19,000 for sanitation services.

Electors also approved a 2010 Highway Expenditures budget of $350,000.

"That would cover for a tornado, a bridge got washed out or something. Something major that we would have to borrow money to do it," explained Chairman Ellis R. Kahn.

Walters Buildings avoids outsourcing, keeping jobs here

A large steel coil waits to be loaded to the roll-former machine the morning of Nov. 12 at Walters Buildings in Allenton. The addition of the $250,000 machine has allowed the company to do previously outsourced work itself.

TOWN of WAYNE- Walters Buildings is humming along with a new machine that has turned previously outsourced work into an in-house specialty.

The Town of Wayne firm, founded in 1958, purchased a state-of-the-art roll-former that creates roof and sidewall steel panels out of massive steel coils. Since its purchase in June, the machine has given the company more freedom and quicker response times for its customers, said Director of Marketing and Business Development Brent Henschel.

It's also created two new production jobs and saved others at a time when metal builders are cutting staff.

"We're buying steel cheaper, so our costs are down because we're buying our steel from the mill and actually buying it higher up stream," Henschel said. "So there's less in up charges, and that helps us. Plus, in this current economic environment, any time you can lower your cost structure or the cost of your inputs, it just helps everyone. It makes you more competitive so you can offer a better building to your customers, for cheaper."

The machine was imported from New Zealand at a cost of about $250,000, Henschel said. Walters received its first shipment of 20,000-pound steel coils on June 16.

The company erects post-frame agricultural, equestrian, suburban and commercial buildings.

Prior to acquiring the roll-former machine, Walters bought its steel from a supplier. It came directly from the steel mill, which sent it to be painted through a contract set up by Walters.

It could be a slow process, Henschel said.

"They bought the steel from the mill, got it painted, had it roll-formed themselves, and they would just send the steel to the job site," he said. "We basically took over what they were doing, but we had to take on an inventory of coils. Then we were rolling it ourselves. So we are actually doing the buying - the whole process - plus we're rolling the steel ourselves."

After five months, not only has the steel quality remained up to previous standards, but Henschel said the company has been able to improve its product without adding on costs.

Teflon is now added to the paint process, which makes it easier to wash off dust and other chemicals from the steel once a building is erected.

"The building looks brighter, newer and cleaner longer," Henschel said.

Another asset is the ability for the company to directly address flaws, such as steel arriving at a construction site dam-

Walters Buildings

The company was founded by Jack and Alice Walters and has manufacturing facilities in the Town of Wayne (Allenton) and Fairfield, Ill. 6600 Midland Court, Allenton, WI 53002 near the intersection of highways 41 and D Phone: (262) 629-5521 www.waltersbuildings.com aged or shipments with missing pieces. Many problems can be addressed before the steel even leaves the shop.

"These machines, they need to be kind of calibrated and modified a little bit as you go," Henschel said. "Because we're actually working with our own people, if the crew sees that it's cutting something a little bit off or it's not cutting square, we can call in right away and say 'hey take a look at this and make sure everything's right.' It's a quicker response, and then we have control over the problem."

Henschel said the production will be an asset as growth continues in an emerging revenue stream: Metal roofing on residential homes.

Cool metal roofing, which can lead to major savings on energy costs, can be eligible for tax credits totaling up to $1,500. The steel pieces are placed directly over existing roofing shingles.

"Everyone wants to go green," Henschel said. "That's been a good thing."

Hydrant hullabaloo

By Mitch Maersch
mitch@kewaskumstatesman.com

VILLAGE OF KEWASKUM—Kewaskum's hydrant flushing ordinance has taken another turn as the village attorney is concerned with the idea of letting private residents do the work themselves.

The Village Board on Nov. 2 decided to send its version of an ordinance back to the attorney with the idea to loosen certification requirements to flush hydrants. Otherwise, residents would have to take a class and apply to the Department of Natural Resources for certification, said Public Works Director Jerry Gilles. Continuing education is required to renew certification.

On Monday, Village Administrator Mathew Heiser told the board Village Attorney Gerald Kiefer said residents doing their own flushing would expose the village to liability.

Kiefer instead suggested the village either do the work itself or create an internal policy encouraging but not requiring annual flushing of hydrants on private drives.

The board has the option to not require the flushing, Heiser said.

The board has been discussing the issue for months after two residents on private drives, Jim Verhalen and Jerry Stilb, complained to the village in September that all public hydrants were being flushed but not those on private drives. Some private drive hydrants may not have been flushed for years, they said.

Residents who live in planned unit developments are responsible for flushing their own hydrants, usually through their condo associations. The village flushes public hydrants annually to clear out sediment and ensure they're working properly.

The board took a copy of the City of River Hills' ordinance on hydrant flushing and tweaked it. The ordinance allows private residents to have the city flush their hydrants or a private company. Regardless, private hydrant owners must submit certificates to the city showing the hydrant is flushed. Penalties ensue if the hydrants are not flushed.

Kiefer's suggestion of an internal policy would not require private hydrants be flushed. That policy could be presented as early as the next board meeting.

Heiser said the issue is different from that of private and public garbage pickup, known as the great garbage debate of '08, in that developer's agreements were silent on garbage collection. They have specific wording on maintenance of structure, he said.

Farmington works on 2035

TOWN OF FARMINGTON—The town doesn't have a 2035 plan yet but the Town Board came mighty close to approving one at last week's meeting, despite two of three supervisors voicing their displeasure with it after another long debate over the concept of "coordination."

The Town Board scheduled a special meeting for next Wednesday at 6:30 p.m. and could act on the 2035 plan. Supervisor Art Seyfert had 10 changes he wanted to go over with Washington County planners.

Supervisor Mark Foyle moved to approve the plan at last week's meeting. Nobody seconded the motion so it died.

Town chairman Gary Schreiber said he disagrees with the plan "almost totally and completely," but he was "tired of dealing with it" so he was going to support it. Foyle said he agreed with Schreiber.

Seyfert has been urging the town to incorporate "coordination" into the plan to replace "intergovernmental cooperation," saying it would better preserve land use rights since coordination provides the town an equal seat at the table in disputes.

KMS students commemorate Veterans' Day

By Amber Donath
Statesman Correspondent

This Veteran's Day was commemorated at Kewaskum Middle School (KMS) with a special presentation coordinated by KMS eighth grade teacher Nick Brettingen.

Starting at 8:30am, students were able to view a museum of artifacts from several branches of the military as well as specific missions and/or wars while the KMS band played patriotic music.

The official ceremony began with the pledge of allegiance followed by a Veteran's Day video containing the history of Veteran's Day, what a veteran is and the importance of honoring all veterans. Next a few KMS students were selected to share their personal thoughts via essays they had written.

As a special portion of the ceremony, four veterans shared personal stories about what it means to them and their families to be a veteran. The four veterans were: Lawrence Wergin, Brettingen's grandfather; Wally Kangas; Dave Schultz, KMS computer teacher and Rob Wilmas, KMS technical education teacher.

Wrapping up the presentation was an official flag folding with Wergin and one student from each grade. Taps was then played at 11am as everyone stood and faced the east.

It was an important and powerful educational experience for KMS students regarding our country and its veterans, those that have and those that still do serve our country to protect our most valuable national treasure... our freedom.

Veterans honored

By Mitch Maersch
mitch@kewaskumstatesman.com

Kewaskum High School students didn't shake the hands of veterans in the middle of the gym to personally thank them this year to slow the spread of swine flu and other illness.

Skipping the one tradition, however, did nothing to deter the sentiment.

Students this year heard from Army Sgt. Corey Skaggs, who asked all veterans to stand at one point during last Wednesday's Veterans Day ceremony. A long ovation ensued.

"Ordinary people who accomplished extraordinary things," Skaggs called them.

Skaggs has done three tours of duty overseas: two in Iraq and one in Kosovo. He told the story of soldiers whose heroism in Afghanistan and Iraq earned them medals.

"Their country called and they answered," Skaggs said. The soldiers "served in the cause for freedom of all mankind and that was their reward."

"We owe them a debt we can never repay," he said. "But we must honor them with deeds and not just words."

Skaggs said to take full advantage of American's rights - vote, write a letter to the editor, mentor a child and serve on a jury.

"Live your lives and be good Americans," he said. "Then all veterans can know their sacrifices won't be in vain."

Kewaskum Principal Christine Horbas told students honoring veterans will fall on them.

"It's going to be your responsibility to continue these traditions," she said.

Skaggs is originally from the Beaver Dam area and grew up in Virginia Beach. He works at the Army Recruitment Station in West Bend.

Skaggs served in Kosovo in 2001 and in Iraq in 2003, both times working on land combat electric missile systems. In 2006, he returned to Iraq as infantry team leader.

Skaggs said the recent tragedy in Fort Hood in Texas doesn't impact Veterans Day.

"Veterans Day is what it is - both the soldiers that lost their lives at Fort Hood and every soldier who's lost his life from day one," he said.

This was his first Veterans Day speech. He was in the field for the past 10 Veterans Days. He was happy to deliver it.

"It means a lot for me to be able to say thank you to veterans in town and talk to kids in one shot," he said.

Donald Koerbel, a World War II veteran and 64-year member of the Kewaskum Veterans of Foreign Wars Post 384, said ceremonies like Wednesday's is important.

"I think it's helpful for the kids. At least it keeps reminding them of veterans," he said.
